Foreword

For thousands of years, astrology has captivated humanity with its ability to offer unique insights into human behaviour and personality. In this book, we explore how astrology can illuminate our understanding of our children and enrich our relationship with them.

In these pages, you'll find a detailed interpretation of the meaning of the main planets - the Sun, Moon, Mercury, Venus and Mars - in each sign and astrological house, applied to your child's behaviour. The Sun indicates the child's fundamental energy and deep motivations, the Moon reveals his or her emotions and instinctive needs, Mercury his or her way of communicating and interacting, Venus his or her preferences and affections, while Mars shows his or her energy and reactions in the face of challenges. In addition, planetary aspect astrology helps to deepen this understanding by revealing how the different forces at play may interact.

Astrology applied to our children may seem bold or unusual, but it offers a fascinating framework for better understanding their behaviours, strengths and needs. Whether your child is fiery like an Aries, lonely like a Capricorn or tender like a Cancer, this book is designed to help you interpret and nurture the unique relationship you share with them.

As you turn these pages, I invite you to discover a new way of seeing and appreciating your child, under the light of the stars. In this exploration, you'll find revelations not only to help you understand your child better, but also to strengthen your connection with him, by responding better to his needs and respecting his unique traits.

Introduction

Children occupy a precious place in our lives. Despite our love for them, understanding their behaviour, preferences and reactions can sometimes prove complex. This is where astrology can prove a fascinating and unique tool for deepening our understanding of our children.

This book is designed to introduce you to your child's astrological world. It will help you discover how the position of the planets at the time of your child's birth can be reflected in his or her everyday behaviour. For example, you'll learn why a particularly communicative child might have Mercury in the sign of Gemini, or why another child is so fond of snuggling up to his or her parents. Each planet, depending on its position in a sign or house, reveals a dimension of your child's personality and behaviour.

We'll start by exploring the significance of the main planets in the zodiac signs and astrological houses. You'll find clear, detailed explanations of how each planetary position translates into your child's behaviour. For example, the position of Mars could indicate how your child defends his or her territory, while the position of Venus could indicate how he or she expresses affection. We'll also take into account the aspects between the planets, which show how these celestial forces interact with each other and reveal your child's traits and behaviours. These configurations can also highlight internal challenges, such as a tense aspect between the Moon and Saturn, which could suggest a child who is more reserved or prone to anxiety.

We will also explore a fascinating aspect of astrology: the compatibility between children and their parents based on their respective astrological charts.

This astrological journey is an invitation to observe your child in a new light and cultivate an even more harmonious and enriching relationship. Whether you are an astrology enthusiast or simply curious to discover another facet of your child, this book is here to awaken your interest and deepen your bond with him. By gaining a better understanding of your child's astral constellations, you will be better prepared to respond to his needs, anticipate his behaviour and share with him moments of complicity that will enrich your life and his.

Your child's sun sign

Your child's Sun sign is one of the most fundamental keys to understanding his or her personality. In a birth chart, the Sun represents the vital force, the source of energy that nourishes and motivates each person. It's this Sun position that reveals how your child expresses his vitality, expends his energy and seeks to assert himself in his environment.

His Sun is in the sign of Aries

For a child with the Sun in Aries, this energy manifests itself in boundless enthusiasm and impressive vitality. This child has an innate need to stand out and take on challenges, even in simple contexts like games or school activities. Curious and dynamic, they are not afraid to take the initiative, often expressing their desire for independence from an early age. However, they can find it hard to cope with frustration if the results are not immediate, or if they are forced to remain inactive. To help them blossom, it's important to offer them an environment where they can explore, experiment and feel they are making progress, while gradually teaching them to manage expectations and persevere. Their radiant energy can inspire their peers and others around them, but they also need to learn to channel their impulses to work better with others.

His Sun is in the sign of Taurus

For a child with the Sun in Taurus, this energy manifests itself in a natural need for stability and security. This child often prefers a calm, regular rhythm, thriving in an environment where routines are clear and expectations consistent. They show great perseverance and a remarkable ability to concentrate on a task, provided they are given time to progress at their own pace. Very attached to what they consider to be "theirs" (objects, spaces or relationships), they can be possessive and have difficulty accepting sudden changes. To help them flourish, it's important to value their efforts and show them the concrete results of their work, while encouraging them to be flexible when a situation requires them to adapt quickly. Their instinctive connection with nature and the material world can also be nurtured through creative or outdoor activities.

His Sun is in the sign of Gemini

For a child with the Sun in Gemini, this energy manifests itself in insatiable curiosity and a lively mind. This child is often on the move, both physically and intellectually, exploring everything around them with enthusiasm. They love to ask questions, chat and tell stories, sometimes with an overflowing imagination. Sociable, they get on well with others and enjoy sharing their discoveries. However, his impatience may mean that he has difficulty concentrating on a single activity or finishing what he starts. To help them flourish, it's important to stimulate their natural curiosity with varied experiences and playful learning, while gently encouraging them to develop their ability to focus. His humour and quick wit make him a ray of sunshine in his environment, but he will benefit from learning to balance his need for diversity with a degree of consistency.

His Sun is in the sign of Cancer

For a child with the Sun in Cancer, this energy translates into deep emotional sensitivity and a strong need for emotional security. This child is often very attached to his family and finds comfort in a warm, stable environment. Receptive to the moods and emotions of others, they can be shy or reserved when they feel vulnerable. They have a fertile imagination and can express themselves creatively, particularly through drawing, stories or games. To help them blossom, it's essential to respect their sensitivities, offer them a space in which they feel confident, and encourage them to express their emotions. This child, although sometimes withdrawn into himself, has a lot to offer in terms of tenderness and understanding, but he will have to learn to balance his need for protection with a gradual openness to the outside world.

His Sun is in the sign of Leo

For a child with the Sun in Leo, this energy manifests itself in a strong presence and a natural need to be recognised and valued. This child likes to be the centre of attention, whether through games, performances or social interaction. Their creativity is often overflowing, and they are passionate about activities where they can express their uniqueness. Confident and generous, they can be real leaders among their peers, encouraging and inspiring others. However, they may find it difficult to accept criticism or admit their weaknesses, preferring to hide them to preserve their image. To help them flourish, it's important to give them opportunities to express their potential, while teaching them that vulnerability is part of strength. With sympathetic support, they will develop solid self-esteem, enabling them to shine without overwhelming others.

His Sun is in the sign of Virgo

For a child with the Sun in Virgo, this energy translates into great attention to detail and a natural desire to be useful. This child is often organised and likes to understand how things work. They may show a preference for routines and structured activities, where they can express their logic and practicality. Forward-thinking, they strive to do well in their schoolwork or daily responsibilities, often seeking approval through the quality of their work. However, their perfectionism can lead them to worry or find it hard to relax, especially if they feel overwhelmed by high expectations, whether from themselves or others. To help them flourish, it is essential to encourage them to recognise the value of their efforts, however imperfect, and to teach them that perfection is not always necessary. By cultivating their confidence in their abilities, they will develop their potential without putting excessive pressure on themselves.

His Sun is in the sign of Libra

For a child with the Sun in Libra, this energy manifests itself in a strong need for harmony in their relationships and environment. This child is sociable, likes to be surrounded, and often seeks to please in order to maintain peaceful interactions. Naturally conciliatory, they have a talent for understanding different points of view and can mediate between their peers in the event of disagreement. They enjoy cooperative moments and feel safe when they are accepted and loved. However, their desire to avoid conflict can lead them to make excessive compromises or hesitate for a long time before making a decision. To help them blossom, it's important to encourage them to express their own needs and opinions, even if they may not please everyone. This child, with his natural charm and sense of justice, is destined to forge deep and harmonious bonds while learning to assert himself.

His Sun is in the sign of Scorpio

For a child with the Sun in Scorpio, this energy translates into emotional depth and a natural curiosity about the mysteries of life. This child is often intense and can feel things more deeply than their peers. They are drawn to complex questions and mysterious subjects, enjoying exploring what is hidden or unconventional. Reserved, they prefer to keep their thoughts and goals to themselves, but this doesn't stop them from observing everything around them closely. Their need for intensity can manifest itself in passionate reactions and a strong commitment to what's important to them. To help them flourish, it's important to respect their introspective nature while providing a safe environment for them to express their emotions. By encouraging them to turn their difficult experiences into inner strengths, they will develop great resilience and a unique ability to understand others in depth.

His Sun is in the sign of Sagittarius

For a child with the Sun in Sagittarius, this energy translates into natural enthusiasm, open-mindedness and a constant desire for growth and exploration. This child is driven by ideals and a quest for meaning, even at a young age. They like to engage in activities that broaden their horizons, whether through playing, learning or interacting with others. They are often drawn to life's big questions, to tales of adventure and to experiences that feed their need for escape and elevation.

However, his quest for an ideal can sometimes lead him to be demanding, to fail to understand or accept the limits of his environment, or to display a certain intolerance towards points of view that differ from his own. If their needs for expansion and grandeur are not recognised, they may withdraw into a form of exaltation where they seek to shine or impose themselves, or, conversely, rebel against standards they perceive as narrow or unfair.

To support them in their development, it's essential to nurture their need to challenge themselves by offering them opportunities to discover the world at large, whether through travel, reading, or activities linked to a variety of cultures and ideas. As well as nurturing their generous and protective spirit, it's important to teach them to be tolerant and to listen to others, in order to balance their need for personal growth with a genuine respect for differences and diverse perspectives.

His Sun is in the sign of Capricorn

A child with the Sun in Capricorn shows impressive maturity for their age very early on. Calm and thoughtful, they often prefer to observe before acting, and seek to understand how the world around them works. They can seem more serious than other children, attaching great importance to their responsibilities, even when it comes to simple tasks. His disciplined attitude and taste for order make him reliable, and he likes to feel useful within his family or a group. This sense of duty can be a source of pride for them, but it can also be a burden that they impose on themselves at an early age.

However, this child may confuse inner strength with excessive control of his emotions, which sometimes leads him to hide his insecurities behind a façade of seriousness or indifference. They can be very demanding of themselves, to the point of repressing their creative impulses or refusing to express their emotional needs. Some Capricorn children may even adopt an overly humble attitude or be self-effacing to avoid drawing attention to themselves, while others may assert themselves with a marked desire for control, seeking to impose themselves in their environment.

To help a Capricorn child flourish, it's essential to value their rigour while encouraging them to express their emotions and develop their creativity. Offer them moments when they can feel free to be spontaneous and relaxed, without fear of not being "perfect". Teach them that their efforts deserve recognition, but that they also have the right to make mistakes. By showing them that they can combine ambition with pleasure, responsibility with lightness, you will help them to grow up with confidence and balance.

His Sun is in the sign of Aquarius

A child with the Sun in Aquarius is curious, creative and driven by an innate desire to understand the world in their own way. From an early age, they show an independent spirit and a strong need for freedom, while being attracted by social and intellectual interaction. This child is often open to new ideas, fascinated by what is different or innovative, and stands out for his originality. They can be very sensitive to notions of fairness and mutual aid, enjoying taking part in group activities or helping their peers to express themselves better or find their place.

However, this quest for freedom can sometimes turn into a need to reject any form of authority or routine. If this child feels that he is too constrained or that attempts are being made to impose rigid rules, he may become markedly individualistic or defiant. This behaviour may reflect a desire to protect themselves against patterns they perceive as limiting. They may also be reluctant to become deeply attached, preferring to preserve their personal space and autonomy.

To help an Aquarian child flourish, it's crucial to respect their need for independence while teaching them how to reconcile this freedom with the demands of everyday life and interpersonal relationships. Offer them opportunities to explore their original ideas and contribute to collaborative projects that value their creativity and altruistic spirit. Give them an environment where they feel free to ask questions, experiment and explore new approaches, but also guide them to understand the importance of commitment and responsibility.

His Sun is in the sign of Pisces

A child with the Sun in Pisces is deeply sensitive, dreamy and connected to his inner world and to the emotions of others. They show a great capacity for empathy and a natural desire to make others happy. This child picks up on moods, perceives the unspoken and seems to instinctively understand the needs of those around them. Creative and imaginative, they are often drawn to artistic activities or games that allow them to explore their rich inner world. His great gentleness and generosity make him a precious friend, always ready to share or to put himself at the service of those he loves.

However, this extreme sensitivity can sometimes leave him vulnerable to criticism or tension. They tend to absorb other people's emotions like a sponge, which can leave them confused or overwhelmed by feelings they don't always know how to express. They can also be hesitant, lacking clarity in their choices, preferring to float in a world of possibilities rather than commit to a definite direction. This hesitancy can be interpreted as a difficulty in anchoring themselves in reality or coping with situations that are too rigid.

To help a Pisces child blossom, it's essential to offer them a loving, stable and secure environment where they feel confident to express their emotions without fear of being judged. Encourage his creative talents and give him opportunities to dream and explore his imagination, while helping him to develop a certain structure and reference points in his daily life. Teach them to distinguish their own emotions from those of others, reinforcing their ability to protect themselves from outside influences.

Your child's Moon sign

Your child's Moon sign is a reflection of his or her deepest emotions and innate sensitivity. In the astrological chart, the Moon embodies moods, instinctive reactions to everyday situations, and fundamental needs for security and comfort. To understand how your child reacts to challenges, what makes them feel safe or uncomfortable, and how they seek to protect themselves, it's essential to study their Moon. It guides their daily behaviour and shapes their emotional well-being.

In this chapter, we'll discover how the Moon, depending on the sign it's in, reveals the way your child experiences his day and his interactions. You'll learn how to adapt your approach to meet their emotional needs and build their confidence. For example, a child with the Moon in Cancer will need tenderness and stability to feel secure, while a child with the Moon in Sagittarius may seek adventure and novelty to thrive. Thanks to this exploration, you'll be better prepared to support your child in his moods and cultivate habits that bring him comfort and happiness on a daily basis.

His Moon is in the sign of Aries

A child with the Moon in Aries has a vivid and immediate emotional energy, always ready to react in the moment. They feel everything intensely and express their feelings passionately, sometimes even impulsively. Their overflowing imagination leads them to want concrete action and adventure, because they need to be on the move and constantly discovering new things to feel fulfilled. This child doesn't like to wait or remain passive: they prefer to act and take the lead, even if this sometimes leads them to rush ahead or jump the gun.

They have a strong need for emotional independence and can sometimes seem impatient or easily frustrated when things don't go as quickly as they'd like. Despite this apparent fieriness, he instinctively seeks to feel secure, but his way of achieving this is often active and determined. They struggle to create a space where they can express themselves freely and assert their needs, without always knowing how to channel their energy.

To help a Moon in Aries child grow up harmoniously, it's essential to give him ways of spending his energy in dynamic and stimulating daily activities. Encourage him to explore his courage and spontaneity while showing him the importance of patience and reflection before acting. Value his initiative and bold sensitivity, and he'll learn to balance his inner fire with a deeper understanding of his emotions.

His Moon is in the sign of Taurus

A child with the Moon in Taurus is deeply attached to his environment and his points of reference. They need a stable, reassuring environment to feel secure. This child appreciates a regular routine, simple rituals, and a space where he can anchor himself emotionally. Sudden changes or situations that shake them up can destabilise them, as they prefer to approach life at their own pace, taking the time to feel and understand events.

They are often calm, but can be very sensitive to anything that affects their comfort or basic needs. When faced with challenges or strong emotions, they react slowly, as they need time to digest and respond to their feelings. Their ability to integrate experiences in depth makes them emotionally solid, even if this can sometimes seem like slowness.

To accompany a child with Moon in Taurus, offer them a soothing and predictable environment. Cuddles, soft words and objects that remind them of their security (such as a cuddly toy or blanket) can help them to refocus. Encourage them to express their emotions at their own pace, without pressure. This child finds a lot of comfort in nature, sensory activities and simple pleasures like listening to music or cooking.

His Moon is in the sign of Gemini

A child with the Moon in Gemini is curious, lively and always on the move. They are interested in everything around them, ask a thousand questions, and seem to have an insatiable thirst for learning and understanding. This child reacts to situations by relying on their intellect rather than their emotions, which makes them adaptable and capable of finding quick solutions.

Their constant need for stimulation means they can find it hard to concentrate on one thing for long. They like to vary their activities, discover new games and explore original ideas. Their mind is agile, always ready to pick up interesting information or something new to incorporate into their world. However, this fast pace can sometimes make them nervous or scattered.

To accompany a Moon in Gemini child, offer him an environment rich in discovery: books, discussions, educational games, or even walks where he can ask questions and observe the world. Encourage their natural curiosity, but also help them to find quiet moments to refocus. By respecting his need for variety and teaching him to channel his energy, he will develop a wonderful ability to juggle ideas and open up to others.

His Moon is in the sign of Cancer

A child with the Moon in Cancer is a real emotional sponge, absorbing the moods and emotions of those around him. Highly sensitive and intuitive, they pick up on things that others don't notice. They react with great gentleness, but also with a certain reserve, often preferring to observe rather than express themselves immediately.

This child is very attached to his family and home, which he sees as a protective cocoon. They need to feel secure and to know that the people they love are happy. Their emotional memory is vivid: they will long remember warm moments or, on the contrary, experiences that hurt them. Their extreme sensitivity can sometimes make them vulnerable to tension or turbulent situations.

To support them, make sure you create a reassuring and stable environment where they can express their emotions without fear. Encourage them to talk about their feelings, even when they are confused. Give them rituals and cues that reinforce their sense of security, such as shared family time or a special corner where they can retreat to centre themselves. By providing him with this soothing environment, he'll be able to blossom fully and nurture his gentle, caring soul.

His Moon is in the sign of Leo

A child with the Moon in Leo reacts to the world with warmth and enthusiasm. They like to shine, attract attention and feel valued by those around them. His sensitivity is imbued with nobility, and he puts his heart into everything he does, seeking to give the best of himself, even in the little things of everyday life.

This child has a deep need to be recognised and appreciated. Sincere compliments nurture their self-confidence, while criticism, especially if blunt, can hurt their self-esteem. They like to imagine big projects or scenarios full of magic, because for them, dreaming also means wanting to achieve something special.

To help them grow, offer them opportunities to express themselves and show off their talents, whether through play, creativity or age-appropriate responsibilities. Teach them to take situations with a bit of distance, to cultivate a sense of humour and not to take everything personally. By encouraging them with kindness, you will help them to develop their natural generosity and charisma, while learning to manage their emotions calmly.

His Moon is in the sign of Virgo

A child with the Moon in Virgo often reacts to situations with a certain caution and sometimes a small dose of worry. They have an attentive and observant soul, capable of perceiving details that others fail to notice. This analytical sensitivity makes them want to understand and organise their environment so that they feel safe.

They may tend to anticipate situations based on what they have already experienced, which can sometimes make them a little anxious when faced with the unknown. Their selective memory is a strength: they retain precisely what seems essential to them, enabling them to be methodical and thoughtful in their actions. This child needs routines and stable points of reference to feel at ease.

To help him develop harmoniously, encourage him to express his concerns and show him how to transform his practical sense into a tool for self-confidence. Help him to understand that he doesn't have to control everything to be safe, and that he can also be flexible in the face of the unexpected. By providing an orderly but not rigid environment, you will contribute to his emotional well-being while developing his ability to adapt gently.

His Moon is in the sign of Libra

A child with the Moon in Libra naturally seeks harmony in his environment and reacts with gentleness, delicacy and friendliness. They hate arguments or tension, preferring to reconcile and find compromises so that everyone can get along. This need for emotional balance makes them sociable children who want everyone to feel good.

However, they can be very sensitive to rejection or injustice. If they are not listened to or if their need for balance is not respected, they can become deeply disturbed. This child has a fertile imagination, which he often uses to create beauty and peace around him. Their innate sense of aesthetics and justice leads them to seek out what is beautiful, fair and pleasant, whether in their relationships or in their surroundings.

To help them grow up, show them that they are not always responsible for maintaining harmony around them and that they have the right to set their own limits. Encourage their creativity and their love of beautiful things, whether art, music or decoration. By providing a soothing environment and fostering their sense of diplomacy, you'll help them to feel secure while developing their ability to assert themselves.

His Moon is in the sign of Scorpio

A child with the Moon in Scorpio is deeply emotional and intuitive, capable of sensing things far beyond appearances. They experience their emotions with remarkable intensity, often stronger than their peers. This child has a great need to understand what's around them by getting to the bottom of things, exploring mysteries and asking deep questions, even when they're still young.

This little Moon in Scorpio can sometimes feel overwhelmed by complex emotions or fears that they can't always express. They have a highly developed protective instinct, which makes them wary or try to control situations that make them feel uncomfortable. However, they have an incredible capacity for resilience and can bounce back strongly from periods of turmoil or disappointment.

To support them, it is essential to offer them a safe space where they can express their feelings without fear of being judged. Help them to put their feelings into words and teach them that they don't need to control everything to feel safe. Value their ability to perceive things in depth and to transform themselves internally. By showing them how to manage their intense emotions, you'll be helping them to cultivate their inner strength and release the best of their immense potential.

His Moon is in the sign of Sagittarius

A child with the Moon in Sagittarius is a true explorer at heart, driven by insatiable curiosity and a thirst for adventure. This child reacts to situations with contagious enthusiasm, always ready to turn everyday life into a great adventure. They love discovering new cultures, exploring different concepts and asking profound questions about the meaning of life, even at a young age.

This child has a strong need for freedom and can be impatient with rigid principles or routines. They have an exalted and optimistic soul. Their imagination is vast, and they often dream of faraway journeys or stories full of mystery and discovery.

Support their independence while teaching them to respect certain limits, as this can be a challenge for them. Nurture his adventurous spirit by sharing captivating stories or introducing him to different cultures and philosophies. With loving guidance, he'll develop a fine balance between his need for freedom and respect for convention, while retaining his wonderful enthusiasm for life.

His Moon is in the sign of Capricorn

A child with the Moon in Capricorn is often more serious and thoughtful than others, even from an early age. This child has a pragmatic approach to life, preferring order, stability and clear rules. They sometimes seem mature beyond their years, as they are capable of great emotional control and a calm, collected demeanour in the face of challenges.

Their imagination remains anchored in the concrete, and they prefer activities that have a specific use or purpose. This child has an instinctive need for structure and control in everyday life. They may have difficulty expressing their emotions or asking for help, because they want to prove that they can handle things themselves.

To help them flourish, offer them a stable, organised environment where they know what to expect. Encourage them to express their feelings, showing them that emotions are neither a weakness nor a waste of time. Help him to balance his need for security with a little spontaneity, by offering him moments to play and explore, without judgement. With loving support, he'll learn to release the pressure he puts on himself and feel safe even in the midst of the unexpected.

His Moon is in the sign of Aquarius

A child with the Moon in Aquarius is a free-spirited little being, deeply attached to his independence and originality. From an early age, he or she can display unpredictable behaviour, alternating between outbursts of fraternity and moments of detachment when he or she seems immersed in his or her own thoughts. This child often reacts with objectivity and likes to observe situations from a different angle, seeking to understand the world in a way that is unique to them.

They don't like to feel constrained by rigid routines or overly narrow expectations. Their innate need for freedom is reflected in the way they express themselves and the choices they make, which are often surprising to those around them. Very curious, they ask deep or unusual questions, and are interested in ideas that are off the beaten track. Their non-conformist side can make them stand out from the crowd, whether through their style, interests or ways of doing things.

To help them flourish, give them the space they need to explore their ideas and express their individuality. Encourage their innovative spirit and show them that their differences are a source of richness. However, guide them gently so that they learn to cope with the structures necessary for everyday life, while respecting their need for freedom. Value his efforts when he works with others, because he can sometimes feel isolated or misunderstood in his uniqueness. By offering them an environment where they feel accepted for who they are, you will help them to grow up in harmony with themselves and the world around them.

His Moon is in the sign of Pisces

A child with the Moon in Pisces is a highly sensitive little being, deeply connected to his inner world and to the emotions of those around him. Like a sponge, they absorb the moods and feelings of others, which can sometimes overwhelm them. He lives to the rhythm of his inspirations and dreams, moving from a state of intense joy to a gentle sadness without always being able to understand the cause.

This child has an overflowing imagination and an instinctive link with everything that goes beyond tangible reality: stories, music, drawing, or simply the world of dreams. They are often touched by the suffering of others, and their natural empathy may lead them to want to help or soothe, even beyond their capacity. However, they may also tend to run away from difficult situations or responsibilities, preferring to take refuge in an imaginary world to avoid conflict or pain.

The best way to support them is to surround them with an emotionally calm and stable environment. Help them to put their feelings into words and to distinguish between their own emotions and those of others. Encourage their creative talents and offer them moments when they can give free rein to their inspirations, while gently and kindly teaching them to return to reality when necessary. By giving them clear points of reference and affection, you'll help them transform their sensitivity into a precious force for understanding and enriching the world around them.

Your child's Mercury sign

For a child, Mercury represents their natural way of learning, thinking and communicating with their environment. It is through this mental force that your child explores and understands the world around them, asking questions, seeking answers and expressing their ideas. Mercury reflects their need to make intellectual connections, whether by discovering new concepts or exchanging ideas with others.

The position of Mercury in a sign indicates the specific way in which your child prefers to learn and interact. This sign gives a unique colour to his intelligence, revealing his area of curiosity. Whether it's logic, intuition, creativity or analysis, the energy of the sign Mercury is in acts as a motor to awaken his mind.

By observing Mercury in your child's chart, you can better understand his learning and communication needs. This will enable you to provide them with appropriate support, feeding their thirst for knowledge and helping them to develop their own style of thought and expression.

His Mercury is in the sign of Aries

Your child with Mercury in Aries has a lively, spontaneous and daring mind. They think quickly, sometimes impulsively, and don't hesitate to express their ideas as soon as they come to them. Their natural curiosity often leads them to explore new concepts, and their enthusiasm drives them to engage in passionate discussions, sometimes without thinking through the consequences.

This child is an inventor at heart, always looking for innovative solutions and ready to take on intellectual challenges. They prefer action to theory: they need to put what they learn into practice to understand it properly. This means they can be impatient when they feel things are moving too slowly or lacking momentum.

As a parent, you should encourage their initiative and creativity, while teaching them to take a step back before committing themselves to a discussion or project. He needs to learn to listen to and respect other people's points of view, even when they differ from his own. Give him the space he needs to explore his ideas, but guide him gently so that he can develop a more thoughtful and balanced approach to communication. His thirst for intellectual independence is a strength, and with the right support he will learn to use it constructively and harmoniously.

His Mercury is in the sign of Taurus

Your child with Mercury in Taurus has a calm, grounded and pragmatic intelligence. He prefers to rely on concrete facts rather than abstract ideas, which makes him a thoughtful and stubborn thinker. When learning, they like to take their time, analyse information at their own pace and integrate it deeply. A peaceful, structured environment is essential if they are to perform at their best.

This child particularly likes routines and repetitive activities that give him a sense of security. They have a practical mind and prefer simple, straightforward approaches to overly complex or abstract ideas. Their ideas are full of common sense and, although they can sometimes be conservative, they are very solid in their reasoning.

As a parent, you need to be patient with your child's learning pace. He needs time to assimilate things, but once he has learned, his knowledge lasts. Offer them activities that stimulate their senses, such as gardening, drawing or cooking, as this will help them to understand and develop better. Avoid rushing them or placing them in environments that are too noisy or stressful, as this could block them out. With support and stability, he'll develop a mind that's secure, reliable and deeply rooted in reality.

His Mercury is in the sign of Gemini

Your child with Mercury in Gemini is a true intellectual explorer, endowed with insatiable curiosity. They learn quickly and love to ask questions, listen and investigate in order to understand the world around them. Very comfortable with words, they can juggle both spoken and written language, and excel at expressing even complex ideas clearly and vividly.

Their flexible and brilliant mind enables them to adapt easily to different situations and absorb a lot of information in record time. However, they tend to be interested in many subjects at once, which can make them less focused on a task or in-depth learning. They prefer to explore and discover rather than dwell on a single point for long.

As a parent, you can encourage your child's thirst for knowledge by offering a variety of books, discussions and activities that feed their natural curiosity. Offer them opportunities to communicate and exchange ideas, as they love to share their discoveries and ideas. However, make sure you help him to focus on longer-term projects or learning, so that he can also delve deeper into what interests him most. With support, they will develop a lively, versatile and resourceful intelligence.

His Mercury is in the sign of Cancer

Your child with Mercury in Cancer has a remarkable emotional and intuitive intelligence, which expresses itself particularly through stories and memories. They love to tell stories, often inspired by personal experience or what they've heard. His exceptional memory enables him to recall details with great accuracy, restoring each event in its context with emotional and visual richness.

Highly receptive to images, shapes and colours, they learn effectively through visual aids and experiences that evoke emotions or memories. This link between their mind and feelings makes them children who think with their hearts as well as their heads. However, they can be easily influenced by their emotional environment, which can either strengthen or limit their self-confidence depending on the atmosphere around them.

To support their development, create a warm and secure learning environment. Encourage their love of stories and images by offering them illustrated books, films or creative activities. Be attentive to their emotional needs and value their unique way of learning and communicating. Your child will shine best when surrounded by caring and encouragement.

His Mercury is in the sign of Leo

Your child with Mercury in Leo has a lively and radiant intelligence, combining intuition with the ability to synthesise information quickly. When they approach a problem or situation, they display remarkable clarity and draw practical conclusions with confidence. His mind is dynamic, and he likes to put forward his ideas with a certain natural pride.

With an innate sense of communication, he loves to capture attention, whether by telling a story or taking part in a group discussion. He excels at exchanges, often finding the right words to inspire or motivate his listeners. This intellectual ease, tinged with infectious enthusiasm, makes him a naturally charismatic child.

To support their development, reward their efforts and intellectual achievements by showing them how proud you are of their abilities. They will thrive in an environment where they can shine, particularly in activities that allow them to express themselves or speak out. Encourage them to explore different perspectives and to be open to the ideas of others, as this will further enrich their already brilliant thinking and natural ability to communicate.

His Mercury is in the sign of Virgo

Your child with Mercury in Virgo has a particularly rational and practical intelligence. They have a natural ability to organise their thoughts and analyse situations logically and coherently. What sets them apart is their ability to solve problems with great clarity of mind, whether in concrete or abstract areas. They are often drawn to detail and strive to understand things in depth, which can make them an excellent student when faced with subjects requiring rigour and precision.

This methodical young mind is also very observant. They pick up on nuances that others might overlook, and like to find practical solutions, especially when it comes to helping others. Indeed, they can be very attentive to the needs of those around them, listening carefully and offering thoughtful ideas for solving problems.

To support your child, encourage their sense of organisation and give them tools to structure their ideas, such as charts or lists. Offer them intellectual challenges that appeal to their love of analysis, while taking care not to overwhelm them with too many details at once. Finally, value his ability to help and bring clarity to those around him, as this strengthens his confidence in his natural talents.

His Mercury is in the sign of Libra

Your child with Mercury in Libra has an intelligence that is naturally oriented towards harmony and collaboration. They like to explore different points of view before forming an opinion, and have an innate ability to listen to others with attention and empathy. Very sociable, they enjoy socialising and often know how to ease tensions with their sense of fairness and charming way of communicating.

Their minds are refined and sensitive to beauty, which may translate into an interest in the arts or a poetic way of expressing their ideas. They are quick to grasp the subtleties of human relations and are often the ideal mediators in conflicts, thanks to their sense of justice and ability to find compromises. What's more, they enjoy the company of others to enrich their thinking and don't like to work alone for too long.

To support your child, encourage activities that stimulate their artistic and social sense, such as theatre, music or collaborative projects. Make sure they also learn to assert their ideas, as they may tend to adapt too much to the opinions of others to avoid disagreement. Value his talent for building bridges between people, as this makes him unique and valuable in his environment.

His Mercury is in the sign of Scorpio

Your child with Mercury in Scorpio has a piercing and profound intelligence, interested as much in facts as in what lies behind them. From an early age, they have a fascinating ability to get to the heart of things, asking pertinent questions that reveal their desire to understand the essence of situations and relationships. He instinctively picks up on the emotions and intentions of others, often with surprising acuity for his age.

Their critical spirit is one of their strengths, but they can also be direct, sometimes even incisive, when expressing their ideas or observations. They love to solve enigmas, discover hidden truths or explore profound subjects, especially those that touch on the origins of things or the mysteries of life. This taste for investigation can lead them to excel in fields such as science, psychology or the arts, where they can analyse and create with intensity.

To support this child, offer him an environment where he feels safe to ask questions and explore his interests without judgement. Encourage their analytical skills by proposing activities such as strategy games, investigations or books on mysterious or scientific subjects. You should also help them to develop a gentle approach to communication, by encouraging their sensitivity and natural talent for understanding others, so that they can turn their critical mind into a constructive tool.

His Mercury is in the sign of Sagittarius

Your child with Mercury in Sagittarius has an insatiable curiosity and an open mind, constantly driven by a desire to understand the world as a whole. They often ask profound questions about the meaning of life or about subjects that go beyond the everyday, revealing an early interest in great philosophical, spiritual or cultural ideas. This child is naturally optimistic and enthusiastic when exploring new perspectives or discovering different cultures.

They learn best in an environment where they can ask free questions and engage in discussions that stimulate their imagination and intellect. Activities that allow them to broaden their horizons, such as books about other countries, documentaries or even travel, foster their intellectual development. They may also excel in subjects that involve exploring abstract or universal concepts, such as history, geography or the humanities.

To best support them, encourage their love of learning by offering them opportunities to discover the world around them, whether through cultural exchanges, family debates or play activities that stimulate their thinking. This child needs to feel free to explore his ideas while being guided by solid moral values, which he tends to integrate naturally into his world view. Just make sure you help them to structure their thoughts and channel their energy.

His Mercury is in the sign of Capricorn

Your child with Mercury in Capricorn has a serious, thoughtful mind, which prefers to approach things in a methodical and organised way. From an early age, they show a natural ability to structure their thoughts and approach problems in a logical and practical way. This child learns best in a clear, disciplined environment, where he can take things step by step and build on a solid foundation. They are not the type to rush into things: they prefer to delve into their knowledge and take the time to fully understand before expressing themselves.

They are often attracted by concrete subjects that require rigour and reflection, such as mathematics, science or anything that involves structured concepts. They may also have a taste for history or subjects that require a gradual accumulation of knowledge. Intellectual ambition is important to them, and they may be particularly motivated by clear objectives or academic challenges that push them to excel.

To support your child, encourage him to explore his interests by proposing activities that stimulate his reasoning and problem-solving skills. A stable, orderly environment will allow them to develop to their full potential. Be careful not to put too much pressure on them, as they can sometimes be very demanding of themselves. Value their efforts and show them that each stage of their learning is a success in itself. This child, with his natural discipline and perseverance, is often destined to achieve great things.

His Mercury is in the sign of Aquarius

Your child with Mercury in Aquarius is endowed with a lively, inventive and curious intelligence, which leads him to explore a wide range of subjects. This child has an open mind and a remarkable ability to quickly grasp the character of the people and situations around them. They ask surprising questions, enjoy experimenting with new ideas and often seek to understand how things work, whether they be concepts, relationships or objects.

They are particularly attracted to innovative ideas, science, technology or any field where they can express their creativity and originality. They enjoy stimulating discussions and, from an early age, may even enjoy debating subjects that go beyond their own . This child also has a strong need for freedom of thought: he or she does not like to be constrained by rigid ideas or overly traditional methods.

To help them flourish, encourage them to explore activities that stimulate their intellectual curiosity, such as puzzle games, creative projects or open discussions. Offer them an environment where they can express themselves freely and share their ideas, while showing them the importance of listening to others. Their sociable, communicative nature makes it easy for them to bond, but they may also need a little help to structure their ideas and channel their boundless mental energy. This child has the potential to inspire and bring innovative ideas to the world around them.

His Mercury is in the sign of Pisces

Your child with Mercury in Pisces has an intuitive and imaginative intelligence, which often expresses itself in ideas imbued with sensitivity and depth. He perceives the world through an emotional and symbolic prism, which enables him to see connections and meanings that others might miss. This child is particularly receptive to sounds, rhythms and anything that stimulates his artistic or musical sense. It's natural for them to express their emotions and ideas through creative forms such as drawing, music or storytelling.

He has a remarkable capacity for empathy and listening, which makes him attentive to the needs and emotions of others. However, their mind often tends to dream, meditate or explore imaginary worlds, which can sometimes make it difficult for them to concentrate on practical or structured tasks. They can also be very sensitive to their environment, absorbing the energies and emotions around them.

To help them blossom, offer them spaces where they can let their imagination run free, while teaching them to channel their ideas into concrete projects. Encourage them to explore artistic or musical activities that allow them to transform their inner world into tangible creations. Make sure you also provide them with a caring, structured framework to help them stay grounded and manage their highly sensitive nature. This child has a unique potential to enrich the world with his or her visions and innate sense of compassion.

Your child's Venusian sign

In this chapter, we'll discover what your child's Venusian sign reveals. Venus represents the way he expresses his need for love, affection and harmony in his relationships with others. It also reflects his natural way of attracting attention and tenderness, as well as the affinities that shape his first friendships or family ties. A child marked by Venus instinctively seeks out affectionate and rewarding connections, where he or she can feel appreciated and loved.

Venus also reveals the way in which children express their tastes, creativity and aesthetic sense. For example, he may show a preference for certain colours, music or artistic activities that nourish his need for harmony and beauty. Their desire to please and to share pleasant moments is a way of expressing the best of themselves, creating relationships marked by gentleness and complicity.

Understanding the position of Venus in your child's chart can therefore help you support his need to be loved, while encouraging him to develop his natural talents for beauty, art and loving relationships.

His Venus is in the sign of Aries

With Venus in Aries, your child expresses his affections spontaneously and enthusiastically. He or she is often attracted by friendships or connections that form quickly, almost instantaneously, and that give him or her immediate excitement. Your child likes to be the centre of attention and may try to seduce others with his dynamism and zest for life. Their emotions are intense and can sometimes erupt like a bright flame: they love what is immediate, vibrant and captivating.

However, his emotional outbursts can sometimes be short-lived. He may find it hard to make a long-term commitment to his relationships or to understand that deep bonds take time and patience to develop. Encourage him to take other people's feelings into account and to learn to cultivate his friendships gently and consistently. With your guidance, he can discover that love and affection can grow and become even more beautiful over time.

His Venus is in the sign of Taurus

With Venus in Taurus, your child is particularly sensitive to everything that is beautiful, pleasant and reassuring in his environment. They attach great importance to small gestures of affection, gentle words and signs of tenderness. Their emotions develop slowly, but when they feel confident, their attachments become solid and lasting. They appreciate soothing routines and relationships that give them a sense of security and stability.

Your child has a natural attraction to sensory pleasures: he loves cuddles, soft textures, pleasant smells and soothing music. They are loyal in their friendships and show great loyalty to the people they love. However, they can sometimes be possessive or find it hard to adapt to change. Help him to understand that even stable relationships can evolve over time, and that it's important to remain open to these changes while nurturing his precious friendships.

His Venus is in the sign of Gemini

Your child, with Venus in Gemini, has a natural charm and a lively, joyful energy for relationships. They love talking to others, asking questions and discovering new people and ideas. Their natural curiosity makes it easy for them to form friendships and adapt easily to different groups. Your child is often talkative and knows how to find the right words to express affection or ease tension.

However, his constant need for novelty can make him a little unstable in his relationships: he may prefer to multiply contacts rather than become deeply attached to a few people. He may also mask his feelings with humour or a light-hearted attitude, avoiding getting into too serious emotional discussions. Encourage them to explore their friendships while learning to cultivate deeper relationships and express their emotions sincerely. Offer them activities that stimulate their lively mind, such as reading, playing board games or creative projects to share with their friends.

His Venus is in the sign of Cancer

With Venus in Cancer, your child is naturally sensitive and affectionate. Above all, they seek a warm and secure environment where they can feel loved and protected. Their need for emotional intimacy is apparent from an early age, and they become deeply attached to their family and close friends. Tender gestures, cuddles and small attentions are essential to show your affection.

This child can be particularly vulnerable to changes or conflicts in their environment, which can sometimes make them shy or reserved in their social interactions. It takes time for them to open up fully to others, but once they feel confident, they will show great tenderness and genuine devotion. Encourage him to express his emotions without fear and to understand that his feelings are a strength, even if they sometimes make him more fragile in the face of disillusionment. Offer them gentle moments and reassuring rituals, such as reading a bedtime story or sharing creative activities as a family, to nourish their natural need for connection and emotional security.

His Venus is in the sign of Leo

With Venus in Leo, your child has a natural yearning for all that is noble, beautiful and radiant in relationships. They have a great sense of the ideal and seek to experience emotional ties imbued with grandeur and intensity. Very sensitive to the harmony around them, they can be particularly attracted by what is beautiful, whether in the appearance, gestures or words of the people around them. They like to feel special and valued, and offer their affection with generosity and warmth.

Your child may express his feelings demonstratively, with spontaneous hugs, sincere compliments or flamboyant actions to please you. He likes to be recognised for his efforts and may be particularly affected if he feels that his affection is not fully appreciated. Teach him to cultivate patience and trust in relationships, showing him that the most precious bonds don't always require spectacular outbursts.

Encourage him to see beauty not only in what shines, but also in the small everyday gestures and profound qualities of others. By valuing his creativity and his need for emotional intensity, while helping him to develop a more balanced vision of love, you'll be helping him to grow up with an open and trusting heart.

His Venus is in the sign of Virgo

Your child, with Venus in Virgo, expresses his affection in a discreet but profoundly sincere way. Rather reserved, he shows his love through concrete actions and subtle attentions rather than through great emotional demonstrations. He could, for example, tidy up his belongings to please you, offer a small handmade gift or simply stay by your side to help you with a task.

Their need for simplicity and clarity in their relationships can sometimes make them perfectionists or critical, especially if they perceive imbalances or injustices in their emotional environment. Your child feels particularly happy when he knows he is useful and appreciated for his efforts. On the other hand, they may hesitate to express their feelings directly, out of shyness or fear of not finding the "right words".

To support them, show them that their gestures of love, however modest, have great value and encourage them to express their emotions without fear of judgement. Help them to understand that relationships don't have to be perfect to be beautiful and rewarding. By valuing their ability to love with simplicity and purity, you'll help them grow with confidence and authenticity in their emotional bonds.

His Venus is in the sign of Libra

Your child, with Venus in Libra, shows a natural need for harmony and balance in relationships from a very early age. He or she is charming, amiable and has a great talent for calming the tensions around him or her, seeking to maintain an atmosphere of peace and well-being in his or her environment. Their affection often manifests itself in thoughtful gestures and great gentleness towards those close to them.

Your child may also be sensitive to aesthetics and refinement, appreciating the beauty of objects, places and well-balanced relationships. They have an innate sense of justice and can be very upset by arguments or disagreements, which they will instinctively seek to resolve. However, this need for harmony can sometimes lead them to avoid conflict, even when it's necessary, for fear of upsetting the balance they hold so dear.

To support them, encourage them to express their wishes and opinions, even if this sometimes means disagreeing. Show them that true harmony does not come from avoiding conflict, but from the ability to engage in good-natured dialogue. Value his natural charm and ability to create harmonious relationships, while helping him to develop his confidence in situations where relationships may be a little less perfect.

His Venus is in the sign of Scorpio

Your child, with Venus in Scorpio, feels his emotions intensely and deeply, even from an early age. He expresses his affections with a rare depth, and his attachments are imbued with a need for authentic and transforming connection. This is not a child who attaches lightly; he invests his relationships with an intensity that can sometimes be surprising.

They may have a strong desire to understand others in depth, which can make them intuitive and perceptive. However, this emotional intensity can sometimes translate into possessiveness or a need to control their emotional environment, especially if they feel threatened or insecure. Your child may be very sensitive to the emotional dynamics around him, instinctively sensing tensions or things that are left unsaid.

To help him, it's important to encourage him to explore and express his feelings in a healthy way. Show them that emotions, even intense ones, are natural and that they don't have to hide or cling to them excessively. Teach them to respect the emotional space of others, explaining that true love is nourished by trust and freedom, not control. Support his emotional curiosity while offering him a secure framework, where he can learn to navigate his feelings with wisdom and balance.

His Venus is in the sign of Sagittarius

Your child, with Venus in Sagittarius, overflows with enthusiasm and joy in relationships. They love to explore and learn through their interactions, seeking to understand the world and the people around them with an inquisitive and open mind. They often bring a bright and optimistic energy to their friendships and family life, creating a warm and stimulating atmosphere around them.

Your child has a natural need for freedom and expansion in his affections. They can be spontaneous in their expressions of love and have a strong desire to share their ideas and dreams with those they love. They are attracted to all that is grand, noble and inspiring, and may idealise relationships or people they admire.

To help him evolve, encourage his love of adventure and discovery, whether through play, travel or learning new things. Show them the importance of balancing their ideals with reality, so that they don't feel disappointed if their expectations aren't always met. Value their spontaneity while teaching them to respect the rhythms and emotional needs of others. In so doing, you'll be helping them to build authentic and enriching relationships that are in harmony with their generous and passionate soul.

His Venus is in the sign of Capricorn

With Venus in Capricorn, your child will express his affections in a thoughtful and measured way. They may seem more reserved or serious in their relationships, preferring to observe and analyse before opening up fully. Behind this apparent shyness lies a deep need for stability and emotional security. Your child places great importance on reliability and sincerity in their relationships, even from an early age.

He is likely to show a certain caution when it comes to forming friendships or interacting with new people. However, once they've earned their trust, their attachments will be strong and lasting. Your child is looking for relationships that provide a sense of consistency and value, which can sometimes make them demanding of themselves and others.

To help them blossom, encourage them to express their feelings and show them that their emotions have a place, even when they are imperfect or vulnerable. Help them to understand that showing affection is not synonymous with weakness, but with emotional richness. By encouraging their natural ability to build deep, sincere relationships, you can help them to develop an emotional balance that is both trusting and fulfilling.

His Venus is in the sign of Aquarius

Your child, with Venus in Aquarius, shows an independent and original spirit in his emotional relationships. They seek connections based on authenticity and freedom, even at a young age. Sociable and curious, they naturally attract friendships thanks to their unique charm and spontaneous way of relating to others. However, they can sometimes appear distant or undemonstrative, preferring intellectual connections or exchanges of ideas to traditional emotional expression.

Your child appreciates relationships that allow them to explore the world in their own way, without feeling constrained by strict expectations or rules. They may have eclectic tastes and be attracted to people who are out of the ordinary, valuing originality and open-mindedness.

To support their emotional development, make sure you respect their need for space and encourage their creativity in relationships. Show them that commitment and freedom are not incompatible, but that they can coexist in relationships based on mutual trust. Help them to balance their idealism by teaching them how to deal with disappointments or differences in their relationships, while nurturing their ability to dream and innovate in their interactions with others.

His Venus is in the sign of Pisces

With Venus in Pisces, your child is endowed with exceptional emotional sensitivity. They love deeply and sincerely, often with disarming gentleness. Highly intuitive, they perceive the emotions of others with great acuity and show a strong need to bring comfort and compassion to those around them. Their fertile imagination can lead them to idealise their relationships, dreaming of a harmonious world where love is pure and universal.

Your child may sometimes appear reserved or mysterious in the way he expresses his feelings, often preferring subtle gestures or delicate attentions rather than loud demonstrations. They also tend to lose themselves in their dreams, looking for emotional connections that touch on the wonderful or the inexplicable.

To support them in their development, encourage them to distinguish their dreams from reality, while valuing their great capacity to love and understand others. Help them to set limits so that they don't feel overwhelmed by other people's emotions or disappointed when reality doesn't match their ideals. Nurture his creativity and need for beauty by offering him ways of expressing his inner world, such as drawing, music or other forms of art.

Your child's Martian sign

Mars symbolises the way your child acts, asserts himself and expresses his energy in the world. It's the planet that reveals how they meet the challenges of everyday life, defend their ideas, or seek to make a place for themselves in their environment. His Martian energy gives him the impetus to explore, conquer and overcome obstacles, while building his own space of autonomy.

Depending on the sign in which Mars is found, you can understand the specific qualities that your child will need to develop in order to channel his dynamism and express his need to assert himself constructively. Learning to manage impatience, to express your desires without rushing others, or to persevere in the face of failure are all lessons that this energy will teach your child as he or she develops.

By helping your child to discover their strengths and impulses, you will help them to build balanced self-confidence and transform their natural aggression into a positive force, adapted to their age and needs.

His Mars is in the sign of Aries

With Mars in Aries, your child is naturally dynamic and strong-willed. Their need to act is immediate, and they often rush headlong towards their goals. They don't hesitate to take the initiative and love to rise to challenges, sometimes even before they've fully assessed the situation.

Their enthusiasm is infectious, and they are often bold in their actions, not afraid to try or impose themselves.

However, this intense energy can cause them to react impulsively, which can lead to frustration or conflict, especially when they don't get what they want quickly. They can also tend to exhaust themselves by throwing themselves into too many activities without always seeing them through to the end.

As a parent, you can help them channel this energy by teaching them to pause and think before they act, and to persevere even when the results are not immediate. Encourage them to value cooperation and patience, and offer them constructive ways of spending their energy, such as physical activities or creative projects. Your support will help them transform their natural impulsiveness into a positive, confident force.

His Mars is in the sign of Taurus

With Mars in Taurus, your child shows great patience and impressive determination in his actions. When he has a goal in mind, he moves forward with steadfastness and perseverance, preferring to take his time to get things right. They don't like to be rushed or pushed, preferring to go at their own pace to achieve solid, lasting results.

His energy is concentrated and practical: he readily invests himself in activities that have a tangible purpose, such as building, creating or cultivating something. They may seem slow to get going, but once they've started, it's hard to divert them from their path. This quiet strength enables him to solve problems calmly and effectively, without getting carried away by emotions or impulses.

However, your child can sometimes be stubborn, refusing to change course or accept new ideas once he has decided on something. As a parent, you can help them develop a certain flexibility by encouraging them to explore different approaches and to recognise when a situation is no longer worth the investment. Support him in his efforts and value his ability to turn his dreams into reality thanks to his natural patience and perseverance.

His Mars is in the sign of Gemini

With Mars in Gemini, your child is driven by boundless curiosity and impressive mental energy. They love to ask questions, explore new ideas and share their discoveries with those around them. Always on the move, their need for intellectual stimulation is constant, and they thrive in environments where they can learn, experiment and exchange.

Your child has a real talent for communication: he can be very convincing, using witty arguments to express his point of view. However, they can also be impatient in discussions, seeking to have the last word or jumping from one idea to another without delving deeply.

He is incredibly versatile and capable of taking an interest in a multitude of subjects. However, this tendency to disperse his energy can sometimes hold him back in accomplishing long-term projects. He may find it hard to stay focused on a task, preferring to move on quickly as soon as a new challenge catches his eye.

To help him balance his energy, encourage him to structure his activities and finish what he starts. Offer them stimulating challenges, but make sure they learn to work patiently and persevere, even when the initial excitement wears off. His alertness and ability to adapt are valuable assets which, properly guided, will help him to achieve great things.

His Mars is in the sign of Cancer

With Mars in Cancer, your child acts according to his emotions and a strong need for security. The way they defend themselves or assert themselves is closely linked to their desire to protect their family environment and the people they love. Highly sensitive, they can seem reserved in the face of challenges, preferring to avoid direct confrontation. However, when they feel threatened or their loved ones are in danger, they react with impressive determination, guided by their protective instincts.

Your child is particularly attached to his home and his emotional bearings. When they feel confident, they are capable of great generosity and effort to bring comfort to others. On the other hand, in situations where they lack security or stability, they may withdraw into themselves, become angry, or look to you for support.

To help them balance their energy, encourage them to express their emotions and understand that they can stand up for themselves and assert themselves without letting their feelings dominate them. Offer them a stable, reassuring environment, while helping them to develop their self-confidence. By cultivating this confidence, they will learn to channel their emotions constructively and commit themselves courageously to their projects, without fear of leaving their comfort zone.

His Mars is in the sign of Leo

With Mars in Leo, your child acts with flamboyant energy and a strong desire to stand out. Passionate about what they find beautiful or noble, they aspire to achieve great things and to be admired for their talents and initiatives. From an early age, they show great pride in their actions and like to impress those around them with their enthusiasm and determination.

Your child has the natural energy of a leader, often seeking to guide or inspire his or her peers. They enjoy taking on challenges that make them stand out and, when they commit themselves to a project, they do so with remarkable conviction . However, this need for recognition can sometimes make them sensitive to criticism or lead them to seek admiration excessively.

To support them as best you can, encourage them to value their successes while teaching them that self-esteem does not depend solely on how others see them. Help them to cultivate goals that, while satisfying their desire to shine, also contribute to the well-being of those around them. By balancing his natural pride with a dose of humility, he will be able to realise his full potential while inspiring genuine respect and affection in those around him.

His Mars is in the sign of Virgo

With Mars in Virgo, your child is characterised by his desire to do things well and his need to follow a precise method in everything he undertakes. They act with care and think before they act, preferring practical, orderly solutions to any form of haste. He likes to understand how things work and takes seriously tasks that require meticulousness.

Your child displays a discreet but constant energy, seeking to help in useful and effective ways. They enjoy organising, planning and solving problems, often with an impressive eye for detail for their age. However, this quest for perfection can make them anxious about making mistakes or failing to meet expectations.

To help them flourish, value their efforts and teach them that imperfection is part of the learning process . Encourage them to let off steam when they worry too much about small details, and show them the importance of celebrating their achievements, even if they're not perfect. By providing a supportive environment where they can explore at their own pace, you'll help them develop confidence in their abilities while making the most of their innate organisational skills.

His Mars is in the sign of Libra

With Mars in Libra, your child shows a way of asserting himself that reflects his natural need for harmony and justice. He or she has a keen sense of balanced relationships and seeks to avoid conflict at all costs, preferring to use words and compromise to resolve disagreements. Your child is a little mediator, ready to step in to ease tensions and make sure everyone feels understood and respected.

They can be particularly motivated when they perceive injustice or when defending a cause close to their hearts. However, his desire to please everyone can sometimes make him hesitant, especially when he has to choose between several options that could disappoint one or other party.

To support your child, encourage him to develop confidence in his own decisions and to understand that not all conflicts can be avoided. Teach them that asserting their opinion, even if it's not a popular one, is a form of courage and self-respect. Activities that encourage balance, such as dancing or gentle sports, can help them to channel their energy while building their self-confidence. With your help, they can reconcile their sense of harmony with a more assertive personality.

His Mars is in the sign of Scorpio

Your child, with Mars in Scorpio, displays impressive emotional intensity and determination from an early age.

He or she is naturally drawn to complex challenges and situations that require courage and perseverance. When they invest themselves in an activity or passion, they put their whole heart into it and refuse to give up until they have achieved their goal. Their inner strength is a major asset, enabling them to overcome difficulties with surprising maturity for their age.

However, this powerful energy is often expressed in subtle ways. Your child doesn't need fanfare to get ahead; he prefers to work in silence, often out of sight, and may find it hard to accept rules or limits being imposed on him without a logical explanation. He may also show an interest in mysteries, secrets or anything that stimulates his need to understand what is hidden or deep.

To help them flourish, make sure you offer them an environment where they feel safe to explore their intense emotions and passions. Encourage them to express their emotions rather than bottle them up, and offer them activities that channel their energy, such as strategic sports or creative projects that require thought and patience. Your understanding of his sensitivity and need for depth will be essential in accompanying him on his unique and powerful path.

His Mars is in the sign of Sagittarius

Your child, with Mars in Sagittarius, is driven by boundless energy and infectious enthusiasm. They are constantly on the lookout for adventures, discoveries and experiences that will broaden their horizons. Their natural curiosity and need to explore lead them to ask many questions and take an interest in a variety of subjects, often with a pronounced taste for the unknown or foreign cultures.

Endowed with an optimistic spirit and great spontaneity, your child does not hesitate to get passionately involved in what he or she is passionate about or considers important. They have an innate sense of values and can be very attached to what they consider to be right and true, sometimes proving intractable when they perceive their ideals being undermined. Their thirst for freedom and need to act according to their own principles sometimes makes them impatient or reluctant to follow rules they consider arbitrary.

To support your child's development, encourage their love of exploration by offering them opportunities to learn and travel, even symbolically, through books, stories or experiments. Help them to channel their boundless energy by offering sporting or cultural activities that stimulate their mind and body. Finally, guide them so that they learn to balance their quest for the ideal with a certain tolerance towards beliefs or rules that don't always correspond to their personal values.

His Mars is in the sign of Capricorn

Your child, with Mars in Capricorn, distinguishes himself by his thoughtful and disciplined approach when it comes to taking action or meeting challenges. Even at a young age, he seems to possess impressive maturity and a strong sense of responsibility. They prefer to set themselves precise, concrete goals, which they approach with method and perseverance, often surprising for their age. Your child instinctively understands that patience and constant effort are the key to success.

They are rarely impulsive, preferring to take time to think before committing themselves to a task or activity. Once they get going, they are remarkably determined, working tirelessly to overcome obstacles and achieve their goals. However, they can sometimes be inflexible, preferring to abandon a project if they feel it is futile or poorly planned.

To help your child flourish, encourage their efforts and value their successes, however modest. Show them that every step counts, and teach them to appreciate small steps forward without focusing solely on the end result. Offer them long-term activities or projects where they can channel their energy and express their natural rigour. Finally, make sure you teach them to release the pressure and enjoy the moment, as they may tend to focus solely on their ambitions.

His Mars is in the sign of Aquarius

Your child, with Mars in Aquarius, has a lively, original and often unpredictable energy. He or she is driven by a deep need for freedom and autonomy, which may translate into a certain reluctance to follow rules or traditions that he or she considers restrictive or unfair. They like to explore new ideas and are passionate about anything out of the ordinary, whether it's creative projects, technological discoveries or collective causes.

With a forward-looking mind, they are naturally drawn to progressive ideas and are sensitive to issues of justice and equality. They are often ready to defend ideals that are close to their hearts, even if they encounter incomprehension from those around them. They are also highly effective when involved in collaborative projects, but can be stubborn or rebellious if a way of doing things is imposed on them that does not correspond to their aspirations.

To help them flourish, offer them an environment that values their originality and encourages their creativity. Offer them activities where they can express their independence while learning to cooperate with others. Explain to them the importance of compromise, especially when their ideals differ from those of others, and show them that respecting limits can be compatible with the autonomy they cherish so much.

His Mars is in the sign of Pisces

Your child, with Mars in Pisces, is guided by a deep sensitivity and an overflowing imagination. He prefers to act with gentleness and intuition, often driven by the desire to help others or to contribute to an ideal that is close to his heart. Highly empathetic, they feel the emotions of others as if they were their own, which makes them naturally benevolent and attentive to the needs of the most vulnerable.

However, this sensitivity can sometimes overwhelm him, and he may find it difficult to handle conflicts or challenges that require a direct approach. When faced with a difficulty, they may tend to avoid confrontation by seeking refuge in their dreams or by turning away from the problem. What's more, they are easily attracted by a multitude of interests, which can make them indecisive or scattered, especially if they lack clear points of reference.

To help them channel their energy, encourage them to explore creative or artistic activities that allow them to express their inner world. Help them to structure their ideas and projects by helping them to define simple, achievable goals. Also teach them to set limits and recognise the intentions of others to avoid disappointment or manipulation. With your support, they will be able to develop their great generosity while learning to protect themselves and refocus.

Your child's Ascendant sign

The Ascendant is a key element in your child's natal chart, revealing the first impression he or she leaves and the way he or she presents himself or herself to others. The Ascendant reflects your child's style and outward appearance. It indicates how others perceive him, influencing his interactions and the perception he projects. Knowing your child's Ascendant sign will help you understand what sets him apart from others, from his unique attitudes to his spontaneous behaviour.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Aries

Your child with an Ascendant in Aries presents himself to the world with boundless energy and a determined attitude. From an early age, they seek to assert their identity with enthusiasm and spontaneity, leaving a strong impression on those around them. His motto seems to be "I am", as he passionately explores what makes him unique and seeks to stand out through his actions.

Intrepid and curious, they don't hesitate to take on new challenges, often with contagious enthusiasm. They may be drawn to activities that challenge their courage and creativity, whether sports, action games or any other experience where they can excel. However, their intense energy can sometimes lead them to exceed their limits, or to rush into things without always measuring the consequences.

To help him channel his vitality, encourage him to engage in activities that allow him to express himself while learning to manage risks. Remind them that taking the time to think before they act can also be a form of strength. With sympathetic support, he will develop self-confidence and a balanced approach to his quest for freedom and independence.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Taurus

Your child, with an Ascendant in Taurus, is characterised by a calm, stable and grounded attitude. From an early age, they project an impression of solidity and serenity, which reassures those around them. They like to evolve in a peaceful, secure environment, where they can take their time to discover and appropriate their surroundings.

Very attached to physical sensations and simple pleasures, they will particularly enjoy spending time in nature or doing manual activities such as gardening, building or drawing. This little builder in the making needs clear structures and soothing routines to feel confident.

However, his strong connection with the concrete can sometimes make him reticent to sudden changes or anything that upsets his comfort zone. It's essential to respect their natural rhythm and gently encourage them to explore new experiences without rushing them.

Finally, observe how he manages his possessions, as this reflects his need for security and anchoring. Over time, he'll develop great patience and an ability to transform his aspirations into concrete successes, while blossoming in the stability he loves so much.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Gemini

Your child with an Ascendant in Gemini is a little ball of intellectual energy, always on the move and eager to discover new things. They often leave a lively, light-hearted and mischievous first impression, attracting others with their natural curiosity and ability to make a connection quickly.

They love to ask questions, talk, explore and understand the world around them. Educational games, illustrated books and even simple discussions at the dinner table stimulate their minds. For him, everything is a source of learning and pleasure, and he particularly thrives in environments rich in stimuli and exchanges.

However, this constant need for novelty can sometimes make them scattered or easily distracted. They may find it hard to concentrate on one task at a time, preferring to flit from one activity to another. It's important to help them channel this energy by offering varied but structured activities that stimulate their imagination without overloading them.

His great flexibility and natural talent for communication make him a child who integrates easily and knows how to adapt his attitude to different situations. Nurture their enthusiasm and encourage them to talk to others, because it's through talking, playing and interacting that they build their self-confidence and their identity.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Cancer

Your child with an Ascendant in Cancer is naturally sensitive, affectionate and attached to his family cocoon. At first glance, they may seem shy or reserved, but behind this façade lies a rich inner life. They need a gentle, protective and reassuring environment to blossom fully.

He is deeply attached to his home, his loved ones and the memories he builds with them. It is these emotional ties that give them a sense of security and identity. Cuddles, kind words and gestures of affection are essential for their emotional well-being. Daily rituals, such as reading a bedtime story or sharing a meal with the family, provide comforting stability.

However, their sensitivity can make them vulnerable to criticism or conflict. They tend to withdraw into their shells when they feel hurt or misunderstood. Encourage them to express their emotions and show them that it's normal to feel and share their worries.

This child develops a protective instinct towards others very early on, which may manifest itself in a desire to look after friends, cuddly toys or even little brothers and sisters. Nurture their creativity by offering them artistic or poetic activities that allow them to express their inner world while boosting their self-confidence.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Leo

Your child with an Ascendant in Leo has a radiant presence and natural charisma. From an early age, they attract attention with their zest for life, their enthusiasm and their need to express their unique personality. They love to shine and stand out, whether through their talents, their ideas or their innate sense of showmanship.

Very creative, they love activities that allow them to express themselves, such as drawing, theatre, dance or games where they can be the hero of the story. Encourage them to develop this creativity, because it's through these activities that they learn to know themselves better and to grow.

This child has a strong need to be appreciated and valued. Sincere praise and encouragement motivate them to give their best. However, they can sometimes be sensitive to criticism or situations where they feel ignored. When this happens, show them that they are loved and supported, even when they don't shine as much as they'd like.

He also has great determination and a sense of loyalty. They like to take on challenges, go beyond their limits and prove what they can do. That said, make sure you teach him that his weaknesses are not faults, but opportunities to grow. By guiding him gently, you'll help him balance his need for recognition with his deep-rooted self-confidence.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Virgo

Your child with an Ascendant in Virgo has a calm, thoughtful and methodical nature. From an early age, they show a great capacity for observing and analysing their surroundings, often preferring to stand back to better understand situations. This natural reserve should not be confused with a lack of confidence: it's their way of approaching the world with caution and care.

They like routines and well-structured environments, which reassure them and give them a sense of control. Your child will probably enjoy activities that require precision, such as puzzles, detailed drawing or organising their belongings. Encourage these inclinations, as they help develop their innate sense of order and efficiency.

This child may also have a helpful nature and want to help those around them. They may get great satisfaction from being of service or actively participating in improving their family environment. Congratulate them at on their efforts and show them that their help is precious, without demanding that they go out of their way.

Finally, they can be very critical of themselves, often striving for an ideal of perfection. Teach them that doing their best is enough and that making mistakes is an essential part of learning. By offering them a framework in which they feel valued without undue pressure, you will help them to develop healthy and lasting self-confidence.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Libra

Your child, with an Ascendant in Libra, is naturally turned towards others. They have a real talent for establishing harmonious relationships and love to be surrounded, feeling fulfilled when they're at the heart of a balanced, caring environment. From an early age, they may show a predisposition to avoid conflict, preferring to find compromises or ease tensions around them.

They have a natural charm and gentleness that attracts others. Your child may be particularly sensitive to aesthetics and beauty, appreciating pleasant objects or environments. Encourage this sensitivity by allowing them to explore artistic or creative activities that will nurture their sense of harmony.

However, this quest for acceptance and approval can sometimes lead them to want to please everyone, to the point of putting aside their own needs and desires. It is essential to help them understand that they can be loved for who they are, without always having to try to please others.

Encourage their independence by valuing their opinions and showing them that their personal choices are important. With sympathetic support, they will learn to reconcile their desire to be loved with their need to assert themselves, developing the self-confidence that will enable them to fulfil their potential in relationships.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Scorpio

Your child with an Ascendant in Scorpio has a natural intensity and a keen eye for the world around him. Even from an early age, they seem gifted at perceiving what lies beneath the surface of things and people. Curious and observant, he has an innate talent for asking deep questions and seeking to understand the "why" of events.

This child does not like pretence: he seeks authenticity and can be particularly sensitive to what sounds true or false around him. Their emotions are intense, and it's important to help them tame this inner richness so they don't feel overwhelmed. Their temperament can lead them to undergo significant inner transformations, even at an early age, enabling them to grow through challenges and changes.

They can also be determined and resilient in the face of difficulties. However, their need for control or their natural distrust can lead them to become defensive. As a parent, you play a key role in encouraging them to develop confidence, both in themselves and in others.

Let him explore at his own pace and show him that his powers of concentration and insight are valuable assets. By nurturing a stable and secure environment, you'll help them transform their intensity into a source of courage, creativity and wisdom.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Sagittarius

Your child with an Ascendant in Sagittarius is a true adventurer, driven by a natural curiosity and a desire to explore. They are drawn to discovering new horizons, whether through imaginary journeys, fascinating stories or real-life experiences. Always ready to learn, he is interested in the diversity of cultures, ideas and ways of seeing the world.

Their enthusiasm is contagious, and they often approach life with optimism and energy. However, they can tend to get carried away with their thirst for knowledge. As a parent, you can help them channel this energy by offering varied but structured activities that feed their thirst for knowledge and adventure.

With a great imagination and a lively mind, they often ask questions about the "why" of things and may seek to understand broader concepts, such as values, beliefs or the rules that govern the world. This young explorer needs freedom and space to develop to the full. It's important to provide them with an environment that stimulates their mind while teaching them to strike a balance between independence and responsibility.

With his warm energy and openness, he makes friends easily and has a gift for bringing others together. By encouraging him to pay attention to detail and finish what he starts, you'll help him develop his potential and grow in confidence.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Capricorn

Your child with an Ascendant in Capricorn may give the impression of being more serious or reserved than other children. They think before they act and prefer to observe before getting fully involved. From an early age, they show a maturity that can be surprising, seeming to understand intuitively the importance of patience and effort.

This child is a builder at heart. They like to structure, organise and see their efforts produce concrete results. They feel secure in a stable environment where the rules are clear and consistent. His perseverance is remarkable, and he can achieve great things if you encourage him gently and consistently, while reminding him that he doesn't have to be perfect to be loved and accepted.

They can sometimes be demanding of themselves, seeking to meet high expectations. As a parent, you can help him balance his natural ambition with moments of lightness and fun. Show them that it's just as important to enjoy the moment as it is to plan for the future.

Although they may prefer to play on their own or in a quieter environment, they gradually develop an impressive inner strength. By encouraging his stamina and supporting him in his projects, you'll be helping him to build a solid confidence that will stay with him throughout his life.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Aquarius

Your child, with an Ascendant in Aquarius, stands out for his originality and innate need for freedom. From an early age, they show an inquisitive and independent spirit, often preferring to explore the world in their own way rather than following set paths. However, despite their desire for autonomy, they deeply appreciate social interaction and like to feel connected to others.

This child is altruistic by nature, often drawn to causes that affect the collective well-being. They may show an early interest in new ideas or concepts that are out of the ordinary, reflecting their attraction to anything that is avant-garde or innovative. He may be the first to ask surprising questions or find original solutions to problems.

He does not tolerate rigid constraints, whether imposed rules or overly restrictive social expectations. As a parent, your challenge will be to offer him a flexible but clear framework, where he can express himself freely while learning the necessary limits. Encourage their creativity and imagination, while valuing their generosity towards others.

Your child will feel fulfilled in an environment where they can explore new ideas, share with their friends and project themselves into the future. Their uniqueness is an asset, and by supporting them with kindness, you will help them to become a confident person who inspires others.

His Ascendant is in the sign of Pisces

Your child with an Ascendant in Pisces often seems to live in a world full of magic and imagination. Highly receptive to his environment, he picks up emotions and subtle vibrations that others might not perceive. This little being is like a sensitive antenna, able to sense the moods of those around them and adjust accordingly.

At times, they may tend to withdraw into their own inner world, especially when faced with noisy or stressful situations. These moments of withdrawal are essential to help him refocus and regain his equilibrium. At other times, he shows great empathy and a sincere desire to help those in need, even through simple but heartfelt gestures.

It can also be difficult for them to set clear boundaries, whether in relationships or activities, as they are naturally fluid and open-minded. As a parent, it will be important to gently teach him to navigate between his impulses of devotion and his need to preserve his own energy.

Your child will thrive in an environment where their sensitivity and creativity are valued. Encourage their artistic talents, their love of storytelling or their fascination with the mysterious and spiritual. With your support, they will learn to channel their imagination to enrich the world around them, while maintaining a strong connection with their unique inner nature.

Your child's Sunshine House :

In your child's natal chart, the house where the Sun is located is a valuable indicator of the sphere of life that most mobilises his or her energy. It reveals the areas in which your child naturally invests his or her efforts and vitality, and highlights the major challenges he or she may encounter. This solar position helps you to understand what deeply motivates your child and what experiences bring him or her the most satisfaction and fulfilment. The house of the Sun illustrates the aspects of life where your child shines and expresses his inner strength.

His Sun is in the 1st House

Your child, with the Sun in the 1st house, has a presence that doesn't go unnoticed. From an early age, he or she displays a strong personality and a natural desire to stand out. Their vitality and energy attract attention, and they seem to shine effortlessly in their surroundings. This child has an early awareness of himself and his individuality, which drives him to assert himself with confidence.

They like to be the centre of attention, whether through their behaviour or their talents. His need for recognition is deeply rooted and can sometimes lead him to seek the approval of others. As a parent, you can help them find a balance between asserting their identity and respecting the needs of others.

Your child is motivated by the need to explore who he really is. Encourage their self-expression and value their initiatives, while teaching them that their successes are not measured by external praise alone. With your support, they will develop a strong sense of self-confidence and a deeper understanding of their potential.

His Sun is in the 2nd House

Your child, with the Sun in the 2nd house, is deeply attached to what brings him a sense of stability and security. From an early age, they may show an interest in material objects, possessions or anything that has tangible value in their eyes. These possessions are not just material; they often reflect a need to feel rooted and confident in their environment.

This child attaches great importance to what he owns, not simply out of material attachment, but because these items feed his sense of personal worth. They need to understand what is essential to them and what gives them a sense of pride and accomplishment.

You can help him to develop a healthy awareness of his talents and an appreciation of his efforts, by showing him that his value depends not just on what he has, but also on who he is and what he shares with others. His determination to build something lasting for himself may come early; encourage him to explore his natural gifts and use them to create, produce or protect what really matters to him.

His Sun is in the 3rd House

Your child, with the Sun in 3rd house, is driven by a thirst to learn and understand the world around them. From an early age, they have an inquisitive mind and a keen interest in sharing, whether through the spoken word, writing or any other means of communication. These children love to interact with those around them.

For them, ideas and words are powerful tools that enable them to express themselves, ask questions and share their discoveries. They may also have a keen interest in reading, stories or anything that stimulates their imagination and intellect. Their vitality flourishes when they feel heard and understood.

You can help them by encouraging them to explore their varied interests and by valuing their need to engage in dialogue and ask questions. This child will particularly shine in environments where he can learn freely, express his ideas and develop his sense of reflection.

You can provide them with a structured framework that will allow them to channel their energy and deepen their learning.

With the Sun in 3rd house, your child shines when he connects with others and shares his thoughts. His energy is a powerful driving force for becoming an explorer of life and an inspired communicator.

His Sun is in the 4th House

Your child, with the Sun in 4th house, finds his energy and fulfilment in his family environment. He attaches great importance to his home, his loved ones and everything that gives him a sense of security and belonging. From a very young age, they show a strong attachment to their roots, and the home is a central place for them where they can recharge their batteries and fully express their personality.

This child may also feel an instinctive need to protect his private world and to cultivate deep ties with his parents or attachment figures. They are likely to play a particular role within their family, seeking to contribute to the harmony of the home or to take on responsibilities in this space that is so precious to them.

You can help them to flourish by providing a warm, stable environment in which they feel valued and listened to. Encourage them to explore their talents in a reassuring environment, while allowing them to gradually open up to the outside world.

With the Sun in the 4th house, your child shines when he's in tune with his roots and can build a family cocoon that nurtures his vitality and sense of identity. This solid anchorage will help them to grow and find their place in the world.

Your child, with the Sun in the 5th house, shines in the areas of personal expression, creativity and pleasure. They have boundless energy when it comes to playing, imagining and performing. From a very early age, they have a strong need to assert themselves and shine in the spotlight, whether through artistic, sporting or play activities.

They have an innate sense of fun and love to attract attention, not out of vanity, but because they find validation of their identity in the eyes of others. They are often enthusiastic, spontaneous and endowed with a fertile imagination that drives them to create and explore fantastic worlds. Activities that make the most of their natural talent, such as acting, drawing or any form of creative expression, are particularly motivating.

However, this need for recognition can sometimes make them sensitive to criticism. It is essential to encourage them and offer them a space where they feel appreciated and valued, without giving them the impression that their self-esteem depends solely on the praise they receive.

To help them flourish, support their creative spirit and give them opportunities to express themselves freely. Encourage them to develop their self-confidence, not only through the eyes of others, but also by appreciating their own efforts and talents.

With the Sun in 6th house, your child's energy is focused on work, organisation and service. Very early on, they show an ability to concentrate on the tasks entrusted to them. They derive great satisfaction from their ability to be useful, to accomplish concrete things and to contribute to their environment.

Your child can flourish in activities where they can put their methodology and sense of responsibility to good use, whether at school, in practical leisure activities or at home. They feel valued when they know that their work is recognised and appreciated.

It is essential to encourage them to see their efforts as a success in themselves, beyond the end result.

Your child may also be particularly sensitive to his physical well-being and daily routine. He may be attentive to what he eats, to his environment or to the organisation of his time. This attention can be an asset, but it's important to help them maintain a balance by teaching them to let go when necessary.

To support their development, reward their efforts, encourage their natural discipline and help them to develop a more flexible outlook when faced with challenges. By showing them that mistakes are part of learning, you'll be helping to boost their self-confidence.

His Sun is in the 7th House

Your child, with the Sun in the 7th house, finds much of his energy and fulfilment in his relationships with others. They have a deep need to be seen and recognised in their interactions, whether with friends, family or even school. Your child tends to define himself through his relationships, constantly seeking to establish meaningful links and collaborate with others.

This child is particularly sensitive to inequalities and seeks to promote fair and respectful relationships. They have a strong desire to create partnerships or work as part of a team, and thrive in environments where cooperation and exchange are valued.

With this Sun position, he may also have a great ability to understand the needs of others and to mediate when conflicts arise. He often feels the need to complement himself through others, seeking to develop mutual understanding, and getting to know himself better in relationships.

However, this projection into relationships can also lead your child to neglect their own needs in favour of those of others. They may find it difficult to assert their personal limits, sometimes preferring to compromise to avoid conflict. It is essential that your child learns to find a balance between his individual needs and those of his family and friends.

To support their development, encourage them to develop their autonomy while cultivating authentic relationships.

Help them to understand that they can shine not only by collaborating, but also by asserting their own values and being true to themselves.

Your child, with the Sun in the 8th house, is naturally attracted by the hidden aspects of life. He or she has an intense curiosity and a deep need to understand what lies beyond appearance. Mysteries, secrets and deep subjects are of particular interest to them. They often have an enquiring mind, searching for the truth beneath the surface layers, and can sometimes appear more mature or thoughtful than their age would suggest.

This solar placement emphasises personal transformation. Your child may be going through phases where he or she is seeking to reinvent him or herself or to free him or herself from certain limitations. He or she is likely to experience intense moments of significant change in his or her life, leading to profound growth and transformation. These experiences, although they may sometimes seem disturbing or difficult, are essential to their development.

Your child may also show an interest in issues relating to power, psychology or invisible phenomena. He or she may have a great capacity for understanding the invisible dynamics in human relationships and for perceiving what is not being said. This intuitive perception can sometimes enable them to grasp profound truths, even at an early age.

However, with the Sun in the 8th house, he may feel a need for power or influence, but will have to learn to balance this with respect for others. The challenges of the 8th house may lead him to face deep-seated fears or trust issues, which he'll have to overcome as he grows.

To help your child flourish, encourage them to explore their natural curiosity while helping them to understand the importance of trust, sharing and managing their emotions.

His Sun is in the 9th House

With the Sun in the 9th house, your child is naturally drawn to exploration, whether physical, intellectual or spiritual. They have an innate desire to broaden their horizons, to understand the world from new angles and to discover profound truths. They can often find themselves dreaming of distant journeys or taking an interest in different cultures and philosophies. The search for meaning in life is essential to them.

Whether through formal education, books, stimulating discussions or even travel, he is constantly seeking to connect with wider ideas.

This position of the Sun may also indicate a strong attraction to higher education, academic research or spiritual practices that broaden your understanding of the world.

One of your child's strengths lies in his ability to engage in intellectual pursuits that broaden his field of vision.

However, one challenge he may face is maintaining a balance between his quest for intellectual freedom and the need to remain grounded in everyday reality.

Personal expansion and spiritual growth are areas where he particularly shines. He may also have a strong desire to influence his environment in a positive way, sharing his knowledge and inspiring others to think more broadly.

To help them grow, encourage your children to nurture their need to understand the world, while guiding them to find a balance between their ideals and the practical demands of life. Offering them opportunities to broaden their horizons, through travel, cultural exchanges or in-depth study, can nurture their personal growth and help them feel fulfilled.

His Sun is in the 10th House

Your child, with the Sun in 10th house, has a natural energy and determination geared towards success and recognition. They have a strong desire to make a place for themselves in the world and to leave a lasting mark.

This solar position indicates a personality that is naturally focused on achieving its goals, often related to career, reputation or a leadership role.

Your child is very aware of how he or she is perceived by others, and may make a particular effort to behave in a way that is respected and admired. They may feel the need to stand out through their achievements and prove their worth through tangible successes. Career or life goals may become a central motivator.

Your child has natural leadership potential and could excel in roles where they can guide or direct others, whether in group activities, school projects, or even later in their career.

One of the major challenges your child could face with the Sun in 10th house is finding a balance between his professional ambitions and his personal needs. It's important to teach them to detach themselves from external expectations at times and focus on what truly brings them satisfaction and happiness. By helping him to cultivate a sense of success that includes inner fulfilment, you'll help him to better understand that true success lies in a balance between his external goals and his personal well-being.

Encourage your child to pursue their ambitions while offering them opportunities to develop qualities such as humility, patience and self-confidence.

His Sun is in the 11th House

Your child with the Sun in the 11th house has an energy deeply connected to others and to causes greater than himself. They're naturally drawn to groups, friendships and community activities, and it's often in these circles that they find personal fulfilment. Idealism is a hallmark of their personality, motivated by a desire to change the world and contribute to collective causes. Whether it's through friendships, involvement in social causes, or a passion for inclusiveness, your child is looking to play an active part in the life of society.

His sense of individuality is nurtured by collective experiences, and he enjoys being part of a group where he can shine while contributing to the general well-being. This means they often excel when they're part of a team, whether it's a school group, a sporting activity or a collaborative project. They have the ability to stand out from the crowd while being fully integrated with others. Your child may feel particularly fulfilled when working in a team environment, where their ideas and talents are valued and used for the good of all.

Your child probably has high aspirations for the future. They dream of a better world, and their passions and interests may quickly turn to social, environmental or humanitarian causes. You can encourage them to pursue these ideals, while taking care to help them understand that meaningful change often takes time and requires concrete action, rather than abstract ideals.

However, this commitment to social causes or the aspiration to be part of groups can also involve challenges. Your child may find himself seeking external validation or being influenced by the opinions of others in his choices. It is essential to encourage them to cultivate their own identity while respecting their need to belong. The risk is that they may sometimes seek too much approval from others, or sacrifice their own well-being to please the group.

Your child also has a great capacity to inspire others, and can play a leadership role among friends or in community settings. However, they can sometimes find it difficult to reconcile their ideals with social reality, and challenges can arise when they are faced with situations where they have to adjust their dreams to the practical constraints of the world.

As a parent, it will be important to support your child in his quest to belong, while teaching him to detach himself from external influences and follow his own path. Help them to understand that their role in the community can be even more valuable when they remain true to their personal principles.

Your child with the Sun in 12th house has a deeply inward-looking energy. He or she will seek to understand the underlying motivations and mysteries of life. Their inner strength often manifests itself in moments of solitude or contemplation. They may have a need for retreat, where they can recharge their batteries and connect with spiritual or emotional aspects of their being.

Children with the Sun in the 12th house can perceive things that others cannot. This can lead them to be drawn to deep, mystical or spiritual subjects, or even to seek answers to existential questions from an early age. This position also suggests an ability to feel a connection with dimensions greater than material life, such as psychology, spirituality or the mysteries of the universe.

The main challenge for your child will be to find healthy ways of expressing his or her identity. People with the Sun in the 12th house can sometimes find it difficult to feel fully visible or recognised, as they often prefer to keep their talents and energies to themselves. Your child may feel less inclined to seek the limelight, perhaps preferring to work in the shadows or in contexts where they can recharge their batteries without being under constant pressure.

However, this solar position can also suggest a deep potential for healing. Your child could have a natural instinct for understanding and soothing the emotions of others, or even feel a strong desire to help those in need. He or she is able to perceive suffering and imbalances, and could find fulfilment in professions or activities linked to healing, emotional support or humanitarian causes. Sometimes, this need to help others may manifest itself in personal sacrifice, so it's important that you help him set healthy boundaries to prevent him from losing himself in the needs of others.

As a parent, you can support your child by helping them to recognise their hidden talents and by offering them a safe space to explore their spirituality and deep emotions. Encourage them to engage in practices that promote self-awareness, such as art, meditation or self-reflection activities. It's essential that you're there to help them navigate moments when they may feel misunderstood or invisible.

Your child's Moon House

The Moon's position in an astrological house is a key indicator of the experiences that trigger emotional reactions in your child and reveal the way in which he or she seeks security in everyday life. This lunar location sheds light on situations that deeply affect your child, whether it's their attachment to their environment, their need for closeness with loved ones, or the way they deal with stress and the unknown. Understanding the house of the Moon in your child's chart will help you to better understand his behaviour and emotional needs, and to create a living environment that reassures him and gives him confidence.

His Moon is in the 1st House

Your child with the Moon in the 1st house is particularly sensitive to his environment. Daily events have an immediate impact on their mood, and they need a reassuring environment to feel comfortable and safe.

Children with this lunar position seek to be understood and to find an emotional connection with those around them. They may have a strong need for reassurance, often seeking to be close to their parents or loved ones to feel secure. Their attachment to their family and immediate environment is essential to their emotional well-being.

Your child may need special attention to feel appreciated and accepted. Changes in their appearance, identity or social roles can have a profound emotional impact. This sensitivity to how others perceive them can also translate into a need for emotional validation to feel confident.

The main challenge for your child will be to learn to manage his emotions in a balanced way. It is essential that you provide a stable, predictable environment where they can express their emotions without fear of being judged or misunderstood. Establishing regular rituals, such as sleep routines and quality time together as a family, will help reinforce their sense of inner security.

As a parent, you can help your child develop a healthy relationship with their emotions by encouraging them to verbalise what they are feeling. Show them that their emotions are valid, while helping them to regulate them when they become too intense.

His Moon is in the 2nd House

Your child with the Moon in the 2nd house is deeply sensitive to everything to do with security, whether material or emotional. They need stability and comfort to feel emotionally at peace. They may show a strong attachment to objects that give them a sense of security, such as a blanket, a toy or any other possession they consider precious. These possessions can play a calming role in his life, and their loss can be very emotional.

This child develops an awareness of the value of things at a very early age, which may be reflected in a marked interest in money, gifts or the management of possessions. This does not mean that they are materialistic, but rather that they often associate material possessions with a feeling of comfort and protection.

The main challenge for this child will be to learn not to depend solely on material possessions to feel secure. You can help by showing them that true security lies in emotional ties and self-confidence, rather than in the possessions they own. Encourage them to express their emotions and develop confidence in their own inner resources.

As a parent, make sure you respond to your child's need for security with gentleness and patience. Offer them solid points of reference and show them that, even in moments of uncertainty, they can find comfort in relying on their talents and creativity.

His Moon is in the 3rd House

Your child with the Moon in the 3rd house is deeply attached to his immediate environment, whether it's his siblings, his neighbours or his school. Their emotions are closely linked to the exchanges they have with others. He will feel safe in an environment where communication is valued and where he can freely express his ideas and feelings. If you take the time to listen to him and answer his many questions, you will offer him a sense of validation and reassurance. On the other hand, a lack of attention or abrupt answers could easily destabilise him, as he is quick to pick up on moods and unspoken words.

With the Moon in the 3rd house, it's also possible that he'll develop a strong emotional attachment to his brothers and sisters, or to close friends whom he considers almost like family.

This lunar placement can also make him sensitive to changes in his daily environment. A new school, a move or a change in their communication routines could upset their emotional balance. You can help him by gently guiding him through these transitions and remaining open to his concerns.

As a parent, encourage your child to cultivate their talents for writing, drawing or any activity that allows them to structure and explore their emotions. Also help them to develop a balance between the need to communicate and the need to go inward, so that they learn to draw comfort from their own inner world.

His Moon is in the 4th House

Your child, with the Moon in the 4th house, finds emotional security in the family environment and the traditions that surround his home. They are particularly attached to their domestic environment and to the ties they maintain with their family, in particular with their mother or any other person who plays this nurturing role. For them, home is a sacred place where they feel protected and where they can recharge their batteries.

This child is often very sensitive to family atmosphere. They easily pick up on tensions or things left unsaid and can react emotionally in an intense way, even to subtle changes in the atmosphere of the home. For them, a warm, stable and loving environment is essential for their development. Caring routines and daily rituals, such as shared family meals or moments of intimacy, reinforce their sense of security.

With the Moon in the 4th house, your child may be nostalgic or very attached to objects or memories that symbolise their roots. Family stories, old photos or traditions handed down from generation to generation are particularly important to them, as they help them to feel connected to their origins.

However, this lunar placement can make your child more vulnerable to family upheavals. Frequent moves, arguments at home or emotional instability in the family can have a profound effect on your child. He may then withdraw into himself, seeking an inner space where he feels safe.

As a parent, you can support this child by creating a stable home and being attentive to his emotional needs. Encourage them to express their feelings and confide in you, as they may sometimes tend to internalise their pain. Value their bond with their roots, while teaching them to strike a balance between attachment and autonomy, so that they can build their own inner security.

His Moon is in the 5th House

Your child, with the Moon in the 5th house, expresses his emotions through creativity, play and activities that give him pleasure. They have a deep need to feel valued and loved for their unique talents and personal expressions. Their emotional sensitivity is closely linked to their creations, whether they be drawings, stories, imaginative play or artistic activities. They often seek approval from those around them and can be particularly sensitive to feedback, positive or negative, about their efforts.

This child finds great comfort in play and joyful interaction. They enjoy capturing the attention of others and performing in front of an audience, whether through theatre, dance or even improvised shows.

However, the Moon in the 5th house can also make him emotionally volatile when he feels misunderstood or when his efforts go unrecognised. He may be sensitive to criticism and need benevolent support to learn that his creations have value, regardless of external approval.

In terms of relationships, this child often forms deep bonds with friends and playmates. They can also be very protective of the people or things they love, seeking to create a secure emotional space for those who are important to them.

As a parent, you can encourage your child by giving them opportunities to explore their passions freely and by celebrating their successes, big or small. Help them to understand that failure or criticism is part of the learning process and does not affect their self-worth. Create an environment where they can express their emotions without judgement and develop their confidence in their abilities.

Your child, with the Moon in the 6th house, is deeply attached to his daily routines and to the feeling of usefulness in what he does. He derives emotional security from well-organised activities and structured environments, which often leads him to want to help or be of service to others. Their need to feel useful is a powerful driving force that guides their actions and choices, even in the small things they do on a daily basis.

He is likely to be particularly sensitive to adult expectations. A criticism or remark may affect him more deeply than he shows, because he places great importance on doing well and satisfying those around him. This sensitivity can sometimes manifest itself in worry or a tendency to self-criticise when they feel they have not lived up to expectations.

Emotionally, your child is likely to seek comfort in familiar routines, such as favourite meals, specific bedtime routines, or tasks that they complete with care. A job well done is a source of pride for them, and they can find real satisfaction in attention to detail, whether it's a school assignment or a creative activity.

However, this lunar position can also make him vulnerable to stress, especially if he feels constant pressure to perform or if his environment lacks stability. He could be subject to worries about his health or that of his loved ones, as the 6th house is also associated with these areas.

As a parent, you can support your child by valuing their efforts and recognising their achievements, both large and small. Offer them a structured framework that allows them to flourish while encouraging them to accept that perfection isn't always necessary. Help them to learn to let go of the pressure and focus on the pleasure they can find in their activities, rather than on the expected results.

Your child, with the Moon in the 7th house, is particularly receptive to his relationships with others, especially with people he perceives as partners, friends or allies. The approval and support of others are essential to his well-being, as he is naturally attentive to the needs and reactions of those around him.

Highly sensitive to the dynamics of relationships, they are quick to pick up on tensions or disagreements, which can cause them concern. This need for harmony can lead them to adopt a conciliatory attitude, sometimes to the detriment of their own desires. It's likely that they often seek to please or avoid conflict, because they feel secure when the balance is preserved in their relationships.

Your child is constantly trying to understand the emotions of others and to adapt to different social situations. However, this sensitivity can also lead them to be influenced by the moods or expectations of the people around them. It's important to encourage them to express their own needs and to recognise that their emotions are just as valuable as those of others.

If this child sees imbalances or conflicts in parental relationships, this can have a profound effect on him or her.

As a parent, you can support this child by valuing his ability to build harmonious relationships while teaching him the importance of asserting himself and not forgetting himself in his efforts to please others. Create an environment in which they feel listened to and understood, showing them that their emotions have a place, even when there are disagreements.

Your child, with the Moon in the 8th house, perceives what's going on beyond appearances, and may feel the emotions of others with particular intensity. Profound changes, even subtle ones, in his environment may affect his emotional well-being.

This child is naturally drawn to mysteries and subjects that touch on life, death and personal transformation. They may ask deep questions about abstract concepts, even at a very young age, and this may surprise those around them. It is not uncommon for them to go through periods of intense emotion or to express fears linked to the unknown, change or the idea of losing what is dear to them.

Your child needs a strong bond with those close to him, based on trust and emotional authenticity. Secrets, things left unsaid or unexpressed tensions can upset them more than other children.

As a parent, it's essential to help them explore their emotions and provide a safe environment where they can express their concerns without judgement. They can also benefit from activities that allow them to channel their emotional intensity, such as art, meditation or other creative means.

This child needs to feel that he can lean on you when his emotions become overwhelming. By valuing their emotional courage and helping them to understand their feelings, you will be helping them to develop a resilience that will be invaluable throughout their lives.

With the Moon in the 8th house, your child is an explorer of the emotional depths. By offering them understanding and stability, you can help them discover their inner wealth and their desire for personal transformation.

His Moon is in the 9th House

With the Moon in the 9th house, your child feels emotionally connected to the concepts of travel, discovery and learning. His emotional security is based on his ability to explore new ideas, varied beliefs or different cultural environments. This child may be fascinated by adventure stories, books or conversations that stimulate his or her imagination and quest for meaning.

Your child expresses a deep need to understand the "why" of things, seeking a broader meaning to his experiences. They may ask many philosophical or spiritual questions, even at an early age, showing an interest in abstract concepts or distant cultures. They may be interested in foreign traditions, or feel drawn to spiritual or religious ideas.

However, this child may also experience a degree of emotional instability when they feel restricted in their freedom or in their intellectual explorations. It's important for them to find ways of escaping, whether through travel, reading or activities that feed their need to broaden their horizons.

As a parent, you can support this child by offering opportunities to discover the world, even on a small scale: visiting museums, taking part in cultural exchanges or encouraging their interest in philosophical subjects. They need to feel that their desire to explore is valued and that they can share their ideas without fear of being judged.

Your child is also very sensitive to the moral messages or ideals he perceives in his environment. They may be moved by inspirational authority figures, such as a teacher or parent who embodies high values. This emotional connection to ideals or role models can have a profound influence on their development.

Your child, with the Moon in 10th house, attaches great importance to the opinions of others, especially those of authority figures. They often seek recognition, admiration or approval, which can become a powerful driving force for their future ambitions. From an early age, they may show a heightened sensitivity to their image or to the way they are perceived by those around them, whether at school, in the family or within other communities.

This child feels secure when he succeeds in achieving goals or meeting expectations, which allows him to feel valued and integrated into the world. They may be naturally drawn to activities where they can be noticed. Their emotional instinct may also drive them to adapt to social or family expectations, even to the detriment of their own needs, to maintain harmony or meet a need for recognition.

However, your child may also experience moments of doubt or anxiety if they feel unable to meet these expectations or if they perceive criticism. It's crucial to remind them that their worth is not just in what they achieve, but also in who they are as an individual.

With the Moon in the 10th house, your child is also strongly influenced by the example you set. They may idealise or imitate the behaviour and values of their parents or authority figures, seeking to reproduce the they admire. Your role is therefore fundamental in showing them that success, whether personal or professional, is a balanced construction between ambition, personal fulfilment and respect for their emotions.

Thanks to this lunar configuration, your child is destined to play a significant role in the world, but he or she needs a solid emotional anchor to develop fully.

His Moon is in the 11th House

Your child, with the Moon in the 11th house, is deeply attached to his social relationships and his sense of belonging to a group. They find great emotional security in their friendships and in participating in group or community activities. Very sensitive to the atmosphere of a group, they are able to pick up on the emotions of others, which can make them particularly appreciated for their empathy and adaptability.

This child may also become involved early on in causes or ideals that touch him or her. They may show a marked interest in collective projects, whether creative, academic or humanitarian. This need to be involved in a meaningful social context allows them to feel useful and valued.

However, rejection or social exclusion can be deeply hurtful. It is important to encourage them to develop their individuality and to choose their friends on the basis of shared values and not simply out of a desire to be accepted.

As a parent, you can support your child by encouraging their interpersonal skills and sense of cooperation, while reminding them of the importance of remaining true to themselves. Suggest activities that encourage teamwork or participation in groups that share their interests, such as clubs or associations. This will help them to flourish in an environment where they can contribute and feel accepted.

Your child is driven by idealised aspirations or big projects that they want to make a reality. You can help them to channel this energy by offering concrete ways of bringing their ideas to life, while helping them to learn how to deal with any disappointments.

With the Moon in the 12th house, your child is searching for a connection with his inner world. He or she often seems absorbed by his or her own thoughts and emotions, sometimes preferring solitude or a quiet environment to refocus. This lunar position indicates a child capable of picking up atmospheres or vibrations that others don't perceive, which can make them particularly receptive to the needs of others, but also vulnerable to outside influences.

His need to withdraw may be his way of protecting himself or digesting experiences that he finds emotionally intense. He may also be attracted to mysteries, fairy tales, or anything to do with the imaginary and the spiritual.

However, this sensitivity can sometimes make them impressionable or prone to absorbing the worries or emotions of others, which can create a certain amount of inner confusion. It is therefore crucial to help them distinguish their own emotions from those of others and develop healthy ways of protecting themselves emotionally.

As a parent, you can support your child by providing a calm, reassuring environment where they feel free to express their feelings without judgement. Encourage them to develop a creative or spiritual activity, such as drawing, writing, music, or even moments of meditation or contemplation, which will allow them to channel their emotions.

Your child may also have a strong need to feel useful by helping others. This inclination can be nurtured by encouraging them to take part in activities where they can express their compassion and altruism, while learning to preserve their own limits.

Your child's Mercury house

Mercury's position in an astrological house reveals the experiences that will enable your child to develop his or her ability to understand and adapt. This placement highlights the areas of life where he or she should be most curious and where his or her mind should analyse, communicate and learn. Mercury, planet of the intellect, reflection and speech, illustrates the way your child perceives the world, adapts to it and expresses his or her ideas.

The house in which Mercury is located also indicates the type of experiences that will most stimulate his intellectual faculties and the need to exchange, whether through speech, writing or other forms of communication.

As a parent, understanding Mercury's house in your child's chart can guide you in nurturing his mind and responding to his need for intellectual stimulation. By providing an environment where they feel free to ask questions, share ideas and develop their natural curiosity, you'll help them to flourish intellectually and find their own 'place to speak' in the world.

His Mercury is in the 1st House

Your child, with Mercury in the 1st house, seeks to understand the world around him from an early age. He or she may ask a lot of questions, which reflects a spirit eager to learn and a desire to be heard.

Your child also has a strong need to define himself through his words and ideas. It's important to encourage them to express their thoughts, while teaching them to listen to others to find a balance in their exchanges.

To nurture their development, create an environment where they can explore their ideas freely and allow them to share their discoveries. Give them space to discuss, debate and express themselves, as this boosts their self-confidence and sense of identity.

His Mercury is in the 2nd House

With Mercury in the 2nd house, your child is naturally inclined to analyse and understand the value of things, be they material objects, ideas or even his own talents. From a very early age, he or she may wonder about what has value in his or her life or about the means to guarantee his or her security and comfort.

He is likely to seek to express his ideas in a way that is useful or linked to practical goals. He may also have a particular talent for managing his personal resources, whether it's his pocket money, his belongings, or even his time. His mind might be drawn to subjects such as economics, science, or anything that helps to structure and understand the tangible world.

As a parent, you can help by encouraging them to ask questions about the values and resources around them. Provide opportunities for them to learn how to manage their affairs or develop practical skills that will boost their sense of confidence.

His Mercury is in the 3rd House

Your child, with Mercury in the 3rd house, has a strong need to communicate, whether through speech, writing or other means, and naturally seeks to understand his immediate environment. He may ask many questions about everything around him, showing a marked interest in the details of everyday life.

Relationships with siblings, if they have any, or with neighbours and close friends, will play an important role in their intellectual and emotional development. Learning at school and reading could also become major sources of stimulation for him.

As a parent, you can nurture their curiosity by giving them books, puzzles or educational games that encourage their desire to learn. Value their questions and take the time to discuss them with them, as this will boost their confidence in their ability to think and express themselves. An environment rich in exchanges and discoveries will help your child's intellectual and social potential to flourish.

His Mercury is in the 4th House

Your child, with Mercury in the 4th house, seeks to understand the dynamics within his house, asking questions about his origins, traditions and family histories. Very early on, he or she may show an interest in memories and stories linked to his or her parents or ancestors, seeking to build an intellectual link with his or her past.

They may also express a need for family discussion to help them better understand their inner world and the emotions that flow from it. Their natural curiosity may lead them to explore topics related to comfort, safety or family history.

As a parent, you can nurture this interest by sharing stories about your childhood or encouraging them to keep a family diary. Offer them a space where they feel free to ask questions and express their ideas, even on intimate or emotional subjects. By encouraging open dialogue and valuing their need to understand their surroundings, you'll help them develop structured thinking and feel connected to their roots.

Your child, with Mercury in the 5th house, likes to explore, invent and play with ideas, and may be attracted to activities that allow them to shine intellectually. Whether it's through writing, acting or role-playing, he or she will seek to put his or her thoughts on stage and share his or her ideas in a playful and original way.

This child may also show a pronounced taste for conversation and exchange in contexts that value spontaneity and fun. They have a natural talent for telling stories, captivating those around them, or even excelling in creative areas that require thought and imagination.

As a parent, encourage their creative initiatives and offer them opportunities to express their ideas, whether through drawing, music or collaborative projects. Show them that their thoughts and creations have value, and stimulate their minds by engaging in enriching discussions on subjects they are passionate about. By nurturing their curiosity and love of self-expression, you'll help them develop their self-confidence and their ability to share their inner world with others.

His Mercury is in the 6th House

With Mercury in the 6th house, your child is trying to understand and organise the world around him. They are confronted with situations where they need to analyse, solve problems and adapt to everyday tasks. This placement may also reflect a curiosity about health, well-being, or the processes that make life more efficient and harmonious.

This child may also be exposed to areas requiring close attention, such as science or mathematics. They may also be very sensitive to their immediate environment, seeking to improve what is not working or to understand why certain things happen in a certain way.

As a parent, you can nurture his mind by giving him age-appropriate responsibilities, encouraging him to ask questions about how things work, and rewarding his efforts to contribute to everyday life. Help them develop the ability to analyse and organise. Make sure they don't get bogged down in excessive detail or have high expectations of themselves.

With Mercury in the 7th house, your child is attracted by exchanges, debates and the ideas of others. This placement reveals a mind that seeks to understand how people think, what motivates them, and how to establish harmonious relationships. Your child should develop an ability to negotiate, find compromises, and express his or her ideas in a way that includes different perspectives.

This child needs to learn to analyse the dynamics of relationships and understand the needs of others. They could develop an interest in areas such as psychology, mediation, or any activity that promotes dialogue and understanding.

As a parent, encourage them to express their ideas and emotions, but also to ask questions to better understand others. He could benefit from collaborative experiences, such as group activities or family discussions, which strengthen his interpersonal skills. However, make sure you help them to develop a strong sense of self, to think for themselves, so that they don't forget themselves in their desire to fit in with others.

Your child, with Mercury in the 8th house, tends to ask questions that go beyond the surface of things, seeking to understand hidden motivations and fundamental truths. His mind is often captivated by complex subjects such as psychology, the mysteries of life and death, or even finance and shared resources.

Your child may be attracted to serious conversations or activities involving research and investigation. They may also show a penchant for understanding subtle situations or solving puzzles. However, their need to explore deep subjects may sometimes make them introspective or secretive. It's important to encourage them to express their thoughts and emotions, even those they find complex or difficult to share.

As a parent, you can nurture this interest by providing opportunities for intellectual exploration in fascinating areas and by fostering a climate of confidence where they feel free to talk about their ideas, however intense they may be.

Your child, with Mercury in the 9th house, is endowed with a spirit eager for discovery and turned towards distant horizons, whether physical or intellectual. They have a natural thirst for understanding the world as a whole, whether through travel, foreign cultures, or disciplines such as philosophy, religion or the human sciences. His questions reflect a desire to give a broader meaning to what he learns.

Your child may show an early interest in foreign languages, history or innovative ideas. They love to discuss, debate and share their discoveries.

As a parent, you can support his development by offering him books, documentaries or opportunities to meet people from different backgrounds. Encourage them to structure their ideas and put what they learn into practice, so that they can transform their knowledge into wisdom rooted in reality. This support will help them to develop a rich and inspiring way of thinking, capable of guiding them towards a deeper understanding of the world and themselves.

His Mercury is in the 10th House

With Mercury in 10th house, your child's mind is focused on goals, success and social recognition. Very early on, he or she shows an interest in understanding how things work in the professional world or in social structures. He or she is curious about what adults do and why, and may express ambitious ideas about his or her future or aspirations.

Your child may be attracted to fields such as management, teaching, or any activity involving speaking, writing or organising.

As a parent, you can encourage them to explore their interests while providing positive examples of responsibility and leadership. Help them develop the confidence to articulate their ideas and take on their ambitions. Support them in their school or personal projects, as this will nurture their sense of capability and help them turn their dreams into concrete plans. This support will reinforce their natural ability to stand out and influence their environment in a constructive way.

His Mercury is in the 11th House

Your child, with Mercury in the 11th house, is attracted by intellectual exchanges with his peers and enjoys being in groups where he can share his ideas, debate and learn from others. Their friends will play a key role in the development of their thoughts and aspirations.

This placement invites him to excel in collaborative activities, whether in clubs, school projects or social causes. He or she is challenged to devise innovative solutions and get involved in discussions on subjects that concern society or universal issues.

As a parent, encourage your child's interest in new ideas and enriching exchanges. Offer them opportunities to meet people from different backgrounds and encourage their collective initiatives. Help them understand the importance of cooperation and cultivate balanced relationships, where their ideas find their rightful place while respecting those of others. In this way, you'll be helping to nurture their visionary spirit and their taste for a future in which communication and collaboration play a central role.

With Mercury in 12th house, your child is invited to reflect deeply on the mysteries of life, emotions and the hidden dimensions of existence.

Your child may sometimes find it difficult to express his thoughts clearly, as they are often linked to subtle impressions or intuitions that he struggles to put into words. They need time alone to reflect and recharge their batteries, and they feel the need to be creative in areas such as writing, art or music, where they can express their inner world. His mind might also be drawn to spirituality, psychology, or other fields exploring the hidden aspects of reality.

As a parent, you need to be aware of their need for calm and protection, as they can be sensitive to noisy or stressful environments. Encourage them to express their thoughts and emotions in ways that suit them, such as keeping a diary or creating artistic works. Help them to believe in their intellectual abilities, even if they sometimes feel different from others. By cultivating a caring and secure environment, you can help them develop their unique talents and turn their rich inner life into a valuable force for themselves and others.

Your child's house of Venus

The house where Venus is located in your child's natal chart reveals the experiences that bring him the most pleasure and those in which he finds sentimental fulfilment. It is in this sphere of life that his attachment, affection and feelings manifest themselves most intensely. The house of Venus gives you precious clues as to how he expresses and receives love.

His Venus is in the 1st House

With Venus in the 1st house, your child radiates a natural charm and seductive energy that spontaneously attracts others to him or her. His appearance and attitude exude a warmth and benevolence that generally make him very popular. He has a great need for harmony in his environment and seeks to avoid conflict, preferring pleasant interactions and balanced relationships.

He has a strong need to be loved and valued, and is likely to often seek approval or compliments in order to feel confident. To be at peace with themselves, they need to put others at ease and create a friendly atmosphere.

As a parent, encourage their sense of self-esteem by showing them that their natural charm is a strength, but also make sure they learn that they don't have to please everyone to be appreciated. Help them to cultivate their authenticity and to assert their needs, even when they differ from those of others.

His Venus is in the 2nd House

With Venus in the 2nd house, your child will find great pleasure in tangible, material things that bring comfort and security. He or she may develop an early appreciation for beautiful and harmonious objects, as well as a desire to possess things that have sentimental or aesthetic value. Gifts and small material gestures can be particularly meaningful to them as tokens of love.

They are likely to associate love and affection with a sense of stability and security. This may manifest itself in a strong attachment to possessions or an early sense of the importance of resources. Your child may also have an artistic talent for creating things of value, such as drawing, sculpting or crafts.

As a parent, you can help him by teaching him that the true value of things lies not only in their material aspect, but also in the emotional ties they can represent. Encourage them to share and develop a generous spirit, while respecting their natural need for security. By offering him a warm, stable environment where he feels loved for who he is, you'll help him to develop his full potential, both emotionally and materially.

His Venus is in the 3rd House

Your child will find pleasure and fulfilment in sharing and interacting with those around him. They are encouraged to communicate, share ideas and maintain warm ties with their brothers, sisters, friends and neighbours.

Encourage them to get involved in creative projects or social activities where they can use their communication skills. Create an environment in which they feel comfortable expressing their feelings and ideas, as this reinforces their feeling of being loved and understood. Finally, your child may also have a particular sensitivity to beauty in words or in their surroundings, which could attract them to poetry, music or any form of art that combines expression and emotion.

His Venus is in the 4th House

Your child will find his or her greatest emotional fulfilment within the family and the home. They have a deep need to feel surrounded by love, warmth and harmony in their family environment. Childhood memories, family traditions and the atmosphere of the home play a central role in his emotional well-being. They may also have a particular attachment to objects or places that remind them of happy times spent with loved ones.

You may notice that your child is naturally looking for peace and beauty in his personal space, and likes to decorate his room or create a corner of it that reflects his personality. Encourage this sensitivity by offering them a soothing and secure family environment, where they feel free to express their emotions. Your child may also show great tenderness towards his parents or an interest in family activities that strengthen emotional bonds, such as cooking together or sharing traditions. Create a loving home and your child will flourish.

Your child is naturally attracted to anything that allows him to share his love of life. They find pleasure in creative activities, play and experiences that give them the opportunity to develop their full emotional potential.

You may notice that they have a particular talent for the arts, dance, theatre or any other form of creative expression. Encourage this facet of his personality by offering him opportunities to develop his artistic gifts or by taking part in playful activities that stimulate his imagination. This investment also shows a strong ability to appreciate simple pleasures and to find joy in interacting with others.

Your child likes to feel admired and valued, so don't hesitate to recognise their efforts and successes. By helping them to channel their love of beauty and self-expression into constructive projects, you will be accompanying them as they develop their natural talents and innate sense of joie de vivre.

His Venus is in the 6th House

Your child finds pleasure and fulfilment in daily routines and the little things that give rhythm to life. They show their affection through practical gestures and special attention to the needs of others. You may notice that they are happy when they feel useful, like helping or collaborating with others, particularly in a structured setting such as school or household chores.

Your child may feel inspired by a well-organised, aesthetically pleasing space, or motivated by activities that require care and dedication, such as looking after an animal or taking part in a group project.

To help them develop, encourage them to develop a sense of service that does not sacrifice their own needs. Show him that it's important to take care of himself while being attentive to others. By recognising his efforts and valuing his need for harmony in the little things, you'll help him grow up with a balanced sense of love and commitment in his day-to-day relationships.

Your child finds sentimental and emotional fulfilment in relationships with others. Very early on, they may show a need to create harmonious relationships. They are encouraged to develop a sense of cooperation and diplomacy, and to make compromises to maintain peace and serenity in their relationships.

Your child attaches a great deal of importance to what other people think of him, seeking to be liked and accepted. This can make them particularly sensitive to conflict or disharmony. You may find that they thrive best when surrounded by people who value their need to share and be in partnership, whether in friendship, family or later in their love life.

To help him grow in this energy, encourage him to develop a self-esteem that is independent of the opinions of others. Help them to understand that the love and acceptance they are looking for are to be found first and foremost within themselves. Also show them how to establish balanced relationships where they can give without forgetting themselves and receive without guilt.

Your child is invited to explore his or her complex emotions and relationship dynamics. This position of Venus indicates a heightened sensitivity to emotional transformations and an interest in what lies beneath the surface of relationships. Your child could also develop an attraction to mysteries, secrets, and anything that involves emotional or material sharing.

In their relationships, they are sensitive to the idea of loss or betrayal. Experiences related to trust and intimacy will be of great importance in his emotional development. They may also have a special relationship with issues relating to shared resources.

As a parent, you can help them navigate this depth by offering them a safe space to express their feelings, even the most complex or conflicting ones. Encourage them to understand that the changes they face, while sometimes difficult, are also opportunities for growth. By cultivating a healthy approach to intimacy and trust, you'll help them build fulfilling, lasting relationships while developing a deep sense of their own worth.

Your child is attracted by experiences that broaden their horizons, both intellectually and culturally. They find pleasure and fulfilment in discovering new ideas, philosophies and different cultures. Their need to explore the world, whether through travel or learning, is closely linked to their emotional development. They can also be highly inspired by lofty ideals and by anything that evokes a quest for meaning or universal beauty.

In his relationships, he may seek connections that stimulate his spirit in its search for truth. He may be attracted to people or environments that offer an opening into the unknown. His most meaningful relationships will often have an intellectual or spiritual dimension.

As a parent, you can nurture this aspect of their personality by allowing them to explore new perspectives, encouraging them to ask questions and venture beyond the boundaries of their familiar environment. Encourage their interest in learning and cultural openness, while showing them how to stay grounded and connected to their personal values. In this way, you'll help them find a balance between their need for freedom and their quest for meaningful connections.

Your child finds particular fulfilment in his aspirations and achievements in the public or professional sphere. From an early age, they may show a strong desire to be loved and admired for what they achieve, seeking to establish emotional ties in contexts where their contribution or image is valued. Issues of social esteem, recognition and success play an important role in their emotional development.

Your child wants the attention and respect of others. The way they express affection is linked to their need to make a good impression and to be appreciated for their efforts.

As a parent, you can support this aspect by showing him that personal value is not based solely on external achievements. Encourage them to develop a balanced view of love and recognition, valuing their efforts and helping them to discover what they are truly passionate about. This will enable him to grow by finding the right balance between his ambitions and his emotional needs, while cultivating a deep respect for himself and others.

Your child finds great pleasure and emotional fulfilment in his friendships and in the groups to which he belongs. They like to feel surrounded and accepted by their peers. His friendships are often marked by gentleness and affection, and he has a deep desire to create a harmonious atmosphere within social circles. He deeply appreciates exchanges and shared experiences with others, finding in these interactions a genuine space for joy and connection.

Your child is sensitive to the importance of solidarity and collaboration, and may also be attracted by collective ideals or causes that bring people together. They may express their affection through altruistic gestures or creative team projects. By making themselves loved, they'll be to act as mediators in the groups they frequent.

As a parent, you can help them by encouraging them to develop social skills and to make genuine friendships based on reciprocity and respect. Offer them opportunities to get involved in group activities or collective projects that feed their need for connection while stimulating their imagination and altruism. This will enable them to grow by cultivating enriching relationships that strengthen their sense of belonging.

Your child finds emotional fulfilment in moments of introspection, solitude or experiences that touch on his inner world. They frequently try to feel and understand the emotions or feelings of others. His affection and attachment are discreet, even secretive, but marked by a great deal of gentleness and devotion. He may have a natural tendency to sacrifice himself for those he loves, seeking to offer unconditional love.

Your child may be attracted to creative or spiritual activities that allow them to express their rich inner world, such as music, art or meditation. They find pleasure and comfort in quiet environments where they can connect with themselves or with something bigger than themselves. At times, he may feel a little isolated in his emotions or find it difficult to fully express his emotional needs, preferring to keep his feelings to himself.

As a parent, you can support them by encouraging them to develop their self-confidence and by offering them a safe space to share their feelings. Value their hidden talents and imagination, helping them to bring them to light without fear of being judged. Support their altruistic impulses while teaching them the importance of setting limits to protect their emotional well-being.

Your child's House of Mars

The house in which Mars is located in your child's natal chart reveals the experiences in which he or she deploys the most energy and shows his or her fighting spirit. Mars indicates the areas where your child acts with determination and instinct. It's in this house that we see his unique way of fighting in the face of challenges and situations that require strength and courage. Understanding the position of Mars will enable you to anticipate his behaviour when it comes to defending what's important to him and to better support his natural impulses.

His Mars is in the 1st House

Your child is encouraged to be courageous, not to back down in the face of challenges, to stand up for what they believe to be right and to fight for what they want. From an early age, they may show a marked desire to be in the forefront, whether at play, at school or with their siblings.

He is likely to express anger when frustrated or upset. His characteristic high-impact energy is also the driving force behind his ability to undertake and assert himself in whatever he does. Physical activities or games that stimulate their sense of action will be particularly beneficial in channelling their energy.

As a parent, value their leadership qualities while encouraging them to respect the opinions and needs of others. It will also be important to teach him how to manage the times when he can't always be the first or have the last word. By providing him with a clear framework and activities where he can express his aggression, you will enable him to flourish and turn his energy into a real asset.

His Mars is in the 2nd House

Your child invests a lot of energy in areas related to possessions, resources and personal value. They may show a strong attachment to their belongings and a fierce desire to defend what is theirs. From an early age, he is likely to develop a strong sense of ownership and a drive to get what he wants. His efforts to achieve his material goals are often marked by determination and instinct.

Their combative spirit is evident when it comes to protecting what they consider to be precious, be it objects, pocket money or personal values. They may also have a strong desire to prove their worth, leading them to work hard for recognition or success. However, this intensity can sometimes translate into stubbornness or difficulty sharing.

As a parent, you can encourage your child to develop a healthy relationship with material possessions and to understand that their personal value does not depend solely on what they have. Help them to cultivate generosity and to learn that cooperation and sharing can also be sources of satisfaction.

His Mars is in the 3rd House

Your child invests his energy in communication, sharing and learning. They need to develop a fighting spirit to defend their ideas or make themselves heard. Discussions, debates and interactions with those around them stimulate them and reveal their intellectual dynamism.

Your child may also show a certain impatience with learning or with relationships with brothers, sisters and peers. They are likely to act with determination to explore and understand their immediate environment. However, they may also tend to react impulsively to disagreements or misunderstandings.

As a parent, you can help them to channel this energy by encouraging activities that feed their mind, such as reading, thinking games or sports that require strategy. Teach them to listen as well as express themselves, so that they can engage in constructive exchanges with others.

His Mars is in the 4th House

Your child invests a great deal of his energy and determination in the family sphere and the foundations of his inner security. He deeply feels the need to protect his home and his family, sometimes showing himself to be very defensive or offensive when these elements are at stake. This position of Mars can make him a child who strongly claims his territory and seeks to assert himself within the family framework.

He may express his frustrations or anger directly within the family, which can lead to occasional conflicts. However, the fact that he mobilises all his fighting strength in private life enables him to overcome family challenges or defend the values he considers fundamental.

As a parent, you can help your child channel this energy by encouraging them to express their emotions constructively. Offer them a stable environment where they can feel listened to and valued for their efforts. Physical activities at home, such as gardening, DIY or taking part in family projects, can be good outlets for their energy.

His Mars is in the 5th House

Your child approaches life with a strong desire to express themselves creatively and passionately. They invest their fighting strength in their hobbies, games and artistic projects. They may have a competitive temperament, seeking to outdo themselves in everything they undertake, whether it's sports, artistic activities or any form of self-expression.

He is also likely to be very intense in his emotional attachments, even from an early age.

As a parent, you can encourage this energy by offering them opportunities to explore their talents and express themselves freely. Activities where they can channel their energy, such as team sports, art or drama, will be particularly enriching for them. Teach them to balance their competitiveness with cooperation and respect for others. By valuing his efforts and showing him how to turn his fighting spirit into a constructive force, you'll help him to develop his creative potential to the full.

Your child shows great energy and determination when it comes to work, daily routine and practical responsibilities. He or she is keen to get involved in tasks that are important to him or her, whether it's schoolwork, small domestic chores or activities involving physical effort. Their need to be active and productive can manifest itself very early on, and they may even develop a particular interest in problem-solving or projects requiring perseverance.

However, this intense commitment to their activities can also make them perfectionists or frustrated if they don't manage to achieve their goals quickly. They may be inclined to overwork themselves or to be critical of themselves and others when things don't go according to plan.

As a parent, you can help them channel their energy by teaching them to organise their time and prioritise their efforts. Encourage them to adopt a balanced approach to responsibilities to avoid burnout or frustration. Support his initiatives by valuing his work ethic and helping him to understand that mistakes are part of learning. You can also boost their well-being by encouraging them to incorporate regular physical activities or moments of relaxation to maintain a healthy balance between action and rest.

Your child is very committed when it comes to collaborations, partnerships and social interactions. They are encouraged to develop the fighting strength to take the initiative in their relationships or to assert themselves in front of their peers. They should not hesitate to defend their ideas or oppose what they perceive to be unfair, even if this sometimes brings them into conflict with others.

This position of Mars also indicates that he could have a tendency to project his combative energy onto his relationships, which could result in frequent arguments or disagreements. Nevertheless, this Mars position reveals a great capacity to motivate and inspire those close to him. Thanks to dynamic relationships, he can measure himself against others and get to know himself better.

As a parent, it is important to help them develop respectful communication and learn to manage disagreements constructively. Encourage them to value cooperation and to understand that their relationships can be enriched by a balance between asserting themselves and listening to others. You can also guide them to channel their energy into group projects or sporting activities where their competitive spirit and dynamism will find a positive framework.

Your child shows a marked interest in mysteries, deep subjects or even taboos. This natural curiosity pushes them to explore areas that others might avoid, and they are able to invest themselves in what intrigues or fascinates them. This position of Mars also reflects a protective instinct, particularly when it comes to matters of shared resources or intimate relationships.

Your child may show great courage in the face of life's trials, developing an ability to reinvent themselves and face change with admirable strength. However, this intense energy can sometimes translate into passionate reactions, particularly in situations where they feel threatened or perceive injustice.

As a parent, you can help them channel this energy by offering them ways of exploring their deepest interests in a constructive way, for example through reading, creative projects or activities that encourage them to think and express their emotions. Teach them to control their combative strength and find balanced solutions to challenges, so that they can fully develop their potential for transformation and resilience.

Your child is driven by a dynamic energy focused on exploration, discovery and the quest for meaning. They show a keen interest in experiences that broaden their horizons, whether through travel, study or the discovery of new cultures and philosophies. He courageously defends his beliefs and does not hesitate to debate or challenge ideas that he finds limiting or unfair.

Your child may also seek out challenges related to cultural differences or high ideals, as they are deeply motivated by a desire to understand the world and find their place in a wider vision of life.

As a parent, you can encourage their development by nurturing their love of learning and supporting their aspirations to see the world differently. Offer them opportunities to travel, discover different perspectives or take part in enriching debates. Teach them to respect the opinions of others and to channel their energy into constructive projects, so that they can combine their passion and desire to explore with a balanced and thoughtful approach.

Your child feels a strong need to distinguish himself and make a mark in the world, whether it's to achieve status, succeed professionally or be recognised for his talents. This Mars position reflects impressive determination: he or she is ready to take on challenges, overcome obstacles and defend his or her ambitions with vigour.

Your child may have a special bond with authority, whether adopting it as a model or questioning it. They like to take the initiative and stand out for their courage in demanding situations, especially when their role or reputation is at stake. This combative streak can also translate into a certain competitiveness or irritation with those who don't share their pace or vision.

As a parent, you can support their natural drive by offering them opportunities to develop their leadership skills and by helping them turn their aspirations into concrete projects. Show them how to manage responsibility with balance and perseverance, while teaching them the importance of working with others to achieve their goals.

Your child is deeply motivated by his need to connect with groups or causes that resonate with his aspirations. They deploy their combative energy in friendships and collective projects, often seeking to take an active, even leadership role in the teams or networks in which they participate. Their combativeness comes out when they defend a vision or an idea, or when they contribute to a common goal or work for the collective good.

Your child may be driven by a certain audacity when exploring new or unconventional avenues. They don't hesitate to question established norms and summon up their courage to defend innovative or progressive ideas. However, this combative energy can sometimes lead to conflict within groups, especially if they feel that their ideas or efforts are not sufficiently recognised.

As a parent, you can help them to cultivate a balance by teaching them to work harmoniously with others, while making the most of their potential. Encourage them to explore projects that awaken their enthusiasm and to persevere with their dreams, while respecting group dynamics.

Your child is driven by a subtle but powerful energy, often directed towards his inner world or towards causes greater than himself. He may seem reserved or discreet in expressing his strength, but this does not mean that he lacks courage or determination. Their fighting strength is most apparent in moments of solitude, when they face personal challenges or explore hidden dimensions of life, such as their deepest emotions or imagination.

Your child may be attracted to activities that combine introspection and action, such as meditation, art, or altruistic commitments. He or she is invited to act behind the scenes to help others or defend what he or she believes in. However, this position of Mars can also generate frustrations or repressed anger, which can erupt unpredictably if he doesn't find a healthy outlet to express his energy.

As a parent, you can help by encouraging creative or spiritual activities that allow them to explore and channel their inner strengths. Show them that it's important to recognise and express their needs, even if they're not always obvious to others.

Your child's interplanetary aspects

By observing your child's natal chart, it is possible to spot configurations called "aspects of tension" between the planets. An aspect of tension occurs when the angle between two planets in a natal chart is close to 90° (square) or 180° (opposition) or 0° (conjunction with Mars, Saturn, Uranus and Pluto).

These aspects of tension reveal internal dynamics that shed light on your child's behaviour. For your child, an aspect of tension often means a challenge or a source of frustration in the way they act, express themselves or interact with their environment. Knowing how to identify these aspects allows you to better understand certain unexpected reactions, such as nervousness, more aggressive behaviour or fearful attitudes to certain situations.

By knowing the aspects of tension present in your child's theme, you'll be better prepared to accompany and support him at times of stress. This will help you to ease their anxieties and strengthen your bond by creating a more harmonious environment suited to their character.

His Sun is in tension with Pluto

Your child has an inner intensity that can sometimes seem burdensome, even to him or herself. They experience a conflict between their need for self-assertion and their instinct to explore hidden truths. This duality can manifest itself in behaviour, oscillating between a desire to assert oneself at all costs and a tendency to defy authority figures or established rules.

Your child may have a strong sensitivity to injustice, but also a tendency to want to control situations or others to protect themselves from what they perceive as threats. If they are frustrated or misunderstood, this could lead to emotional outbursts or rebellious attitudes. They may also have an instinctive fear of losing what is important to them, which can sometimes make them suspicious or secretive.

As a parent, it is essential to help them understand and channel this intensity in a constructive way. Teach them to express their emotions without fear of judgement and to recognise their own strengths while respecting those of others. If your child seems overwhelmed by feelings of anger or frustration, help them learn to be patient and to let go.

Encourage them to explore activities that nourish their self-investigation, such as reading, the arts or projects that involve visible transformations, such as gardening or handicrafts. With loving, structured support, your child will be able to develop remarkable inner strength and use his or her intensity to build a rich, authentic life.

His Sun is in tension with Neptune

Your child has an overflowing imagination and a special sensitivity that connects him to subtle worlds that are often incomprehensible to those around him. However, this aspect can sometimes make them disoriented or prone to escaping from reality. Your child may get lost in daydreams or have difficulty following a clear direction when faced with concrete expectations. They can also be very suggestible, absorbing the emotions and ideas of others like a sponge, which could expose them to illusions or disappointments.

At times, he may appear indecisive or lack motivation, especially when he fails to make the connection between his deepest aspirations and the efforts needed to achieve them. On the other hand, he may suppress his sensitivity in order to meet external expectations, which can disconnect him from his true emotional and spiritual needs.

As a parent, it's important to help them navigate between their inner world and outer reality. Teach them to value their imagination while anchoring it in clear, achievable goals. Encourage creative activities such as drawing, music or writing, which will allow them to express their ideas and emotions in a positive way.

Help them to distinguish between achievable and utopian dreams, without restricting their inspiration . Show them the importance of following a routine and finishing what they start, while leaving them enough space to explore their inner world.

His Sun is in tension with Uranus

Your child is driven by a strong need for independence and a desire to stand out from the crowd. They dislike constraints, rigid rules or any form of authority perceived as arbitrary. This may be reflected in unpredictable behaviour, sudden reactions or a tendency to reject what is imposed on them without necessarily understanding the reasons behind these demands. Your child has a creative mind, but may also lack patience or have difficulty adapting to a routine.

On the other hand, they may sometimes repress their desire for change for fear of upsetting the family or social balance. At such times, they may show signs of frustration, tension or irritability, while reluctantly complying with what is expected of them.

As a parent, it's essential to recognise this need for emancipation while providing a secure framework. Give them space to express their ideas and experiment with new approaches. Show them that autonomy can be built up gradually, without necessarily rejecting everything that represents tradition or authority.

Encourage them to understand the reasons behind the rules and to take part in drawing them up whenever possible. Help them to channel their energy into activities that stimulate their creative spirit and capacity for innovation. Explain that change doesn't have to mean chaos, but that it can be managed in a thoughtful and constructive way.

His Sun is in a tension aspect to Saturn

Your child may seem more serious or reserved than others, with an early awareness of their responsibilities or limits. They may find it difficult to allow themselves to be fully themselves, especially if they feel pressure, real or imagined, to be "perfect" or to meet high expectations. They may be demanding of themselves, to the point of feeling a certain rigidity or fear of failure.

On the other hand, they may underestimate themselves, withdrawing into themselves when faced with obstacles or criticism. This can block the expression of their creativity and dampen their confidence in their abilities. Your child needs to understand that effort and perseverance are strengths, but that it's just as important to celebrate successes and learn to let go.

As a parent, it's essential to support your child by valuing their efforts and helping them to focus on what they have achieved rather than on what they think they haven't done. Show them that mistakes are part of the learning process and do not call their worth into question. Encourage them to explore their talents without fear of judgement, and offer them opportunities to express themselves in a safe environment.

Help him to find a balance between his duties and his pleasures. Teach them that discipline and stability are important, but that they can also take time to play, dream and have fun.

His Sun is in tension with Jupiter

Your child may show a strong need for recognition and admiration, often seeking to impress with their talents or actions. At times, they may tend to exaggerate their achievements or set over-ambitious goals, which can lead to disappointment when they fail to achieve these lofty ideals. They may also have difficulty conforming to rules or expectations, preferring to follow their own ideals, sometimes to the detriment of realism or necessary compromises.

On the other hand, your child may sometimes be too conformist, seeking to please or to conform to social norms in order to be accepted. This could lead them to stifle their own desires and engage in projects or behaviour that do not truly reflect their nature. They may also use humour to deflect attention from moments of tension or discomfort, sometimes to the point of minimising important situations.

As a parent, it is important to help your child find a balance between his aspirations and his real abilities. Encourage them to dream big, but also to realistically assess the effort required to achieve their goals. Remind them that failure is part of learning and that they don't have to do too much to be loved or respected.

Help them to develop a healthy relationship with social rules and expectations, explaining that they can co-exist with their creativity and personal ambitions. Teach them to use their sense of humour constructively, without it becoming a means of escaping or masking their emotions.

By valuing their qualities while helping them to manage their excesses, you will give them the keys to growing with confidence, while respecting their deepest values and the realities of the world around them.

His Sun is in a tension aspect to Mars

Your child shows strong energy and a need to act, but may sometimes seem impulsive or easily frustrated when feeling limited or constrained. They may assert their independence vigorously, sometimes to the detriment of family and social rules or expectations. This Martian energy, when not channelled, can express itself in fits of anger or a tendency to overreact to obstacles, often out of fear of failure or criticism.

On the other hand, your child may be reluctant to express his will or to take on challenges that require courage and determination. Out of fear of confrontation or a desire to please, they may hold back from showing their character or inner strength, which can hamper their personal development and self-confidence.

As a parent, you can help your child find a balance between this Martian energy and their ability to think before they act. Encourage them to channel their energy into constructive activities, such as sport or creative projects, where they can express their fighting spirit in a positive way. Help them to understand that confrontation is not always negative and that it can be an opportunity to grow and assert their convictions.

Support him in learning patience and planning, showing him that fighting strength must be accompanied by reflection if he is to achieve his goals. Reassure them of their abilities when they doubt themselves, while teaching them to accept failure as a natural part of the journey.

His Sun is in tension with the Moon

Your child is gifted with a particular sensitivity, but he may sometimes seem torn between his need to express his emotions and his desire to succeed or be recognised. On the one hand, they may appear to be very attached to their own private world and family, seeking refuge in habits or secure relationships. However, this need for security can hold them back when it comes to stepping out of their comfort zone to assert their will or achieve more ambitious goals.

At other times, your child may give priority to standing out or winning approval from those around him, to the point of neglecting his emotions or putting aside essential needs linked to his inner well-being. This can sometimes make them nervous or even dissatisfied, as they cut themselves off from what really nourishes their emotional balance.

As a parent, you have a key role to play in helping your child find a balance between these two forces. Encourage him to express his emotions without fear, while showing him that they must not become a brake on his ability to decide and act. Teach them to listen to their deepest needs, but also to identify the times when it's important to be firm and determined.

Support him when he feels overwhelmed by his moods, by helping him to put his emotions into perspective with the reality of situations. Show them that their ambitions and inner well-being are not contradictory, but that they can coexist harmoniously.

His Moon is in tension with Pluto

Your child has rare emotional depth and intensity, but these qualities can sometimes translate into extreme behaviour or emotions that are difficult to manage. He may seem mysterious, sometimes reserved or preoccupied by thoughts that trouble him without him knowing how to express them. This aspect can make them particularly sensitive to the atmosphere and unspoken things around them, which can lead to anxiety or a tendency to try to control their environment in order to feel safe.

On the one hand, your child may be fascinated by what is hidden, forbidden or intense, showing curiosity about everything that escapes the surface of things. This may lead him to explore deep subjects or to adopt behaviour that, to you, sometimes seems provocative or uncomfortable. On the other hand, they may also develop a fear of losing the comfort and emotional security they find in their family cocoon, which can make them particularly vulnerable to change or conflict.

As a parent, it is essential to offer them a space where they feel safe enough to express their emotions, even the darkest ones, without fear of being judged. Help them to understand that their intense feelings are not a weakness, but an asset that can help them to know themselves better and to grow. Guide them with patience so that they learn to recognise their fears and their deepest needs, while encouraging them not to shy away from experiences of transformation and renewal.

Your role is also to be a model of stability, showing them that changes and challenges are part of life, but that they can be faced with courage and without losing their balance. By accompanying them on this inner exploration, you will help them to transform their fears and obsessions into an inner strength that will guide them throughout their lives.

His Moon is in tension with Neptune

Your child has a vivid imagination and great emotional sensitivity, but these qualities can sometimes make their inner world difficult to understand or control. They may lose themselves in their dreams, fears or fantasies, having difficulty distinguishing reality from their own imaginary world. This tendency can lead to moments of confusion or insecurity, when it is difficult for them to express clearly what they are feeling or needing.

Your child may be particularly suggestible, absorbing the emotions and moods of those around him like a sponge. This receptiveness, while precious, can also lead them to feel overwhelmed or disturbed by situations they are unable to analyse rationally. They may sometimes run away from uncomfortable realities, taking refuge in daydreams or trying to avoid the simple responsibilities of everyday life.

As a parent, it's crucial to provide them with a stable, caring environment where they can feel secure while exploring their inner world. Help them to put their emotions into words and encourage them to express their dreams and aspirations. Teach them to recognise the boundaries between what is real and what is imaginary, and show them that their inspirations can become positive forces if they learn to integrate them into their daily lives.

Your role will also be to encourage a gentle but regular routine, which will give him reference points while respecting his need for flexibility and creativity. By nurturing their sense of imagination while showing them how to stay grounded, you will help them transform this tension into a source of inspiration and wisdom, fostering their emotional and spiritual development.

His Moon is in tension with Uranus

Your child is very sensitive emotionally, combined with a strong desire for independence and novelty. These two opposing forces can sometimes lead to unpredictable behaviour or changing emotions that destabilise them. They may have difficulty adapting to routines that are too strict, preferring an environment where they feel free to explore and change their habits as they please.

Your child may also react strongly to situations where they feel overly constrained or attached, while at the same time having a strong need for emotional security. These contradictions may manifest themselves in mood swings or an ambivalent attitude towards close relationships: sometimes they seek a protective cocoon, sometimes they abruptly withdraw from it to assert their autonomy.

As a parent, your role is to offer your child a balance between stability and freedom. Create a family environment that is reassuring but flexible enough to allow them to explore their need for independence. Encourage them to express their emotions, even when they are confused or intense, so that they can better understand their reactions to change.

You can also help them to develop a positive approach to change by supporting them when they want to experiment with new ideas or approaches, while showing them the importance of having solid emotional anchors.

His Moon is in tension with Saturn

Your child may show an early emotional maturity or a seriousness that contrasts with the carefree attitude often expected at his age. He or she is likely to feel some form of pressure, conscious or unconscious, to conform to expectations or assume responsibilities that may seem burdensome. This astrological configuration may also indicate a particular sensitivity to the family environment, especially if it is marked by material constraints or a lack of warm emotional expression.

Your child may have a tendency to suppress their emotions or hide them behind a reserved, even aloof demeanour. They may seem to find it difficult to let go, preferring to withdraw into themselves or display strict control. At the same time, they may feel a deep need for security and approval, although they may find it difficult to show this. This tug-of-war between the need for affection and the fear of appearing vulnerable can create emotional tensions in him that he doesn't always know how to express.

As a parent, it is essential to offer them a balance between structure and emotional support. Help them to understand that their emotions, whatever they may be, have value and deserve to be expressed. Show them that they are accepted, not for what they achieve or control, but simply for who they are. Encourage them to take time out to relax and explore their emotional needs, while showing them that stability can be built up gradually and without undue pressure.

With patience and understanding, you can help them develop the inner strength to turn these challenges into strengths. Over time, this can become a source of resilience and wisdom, helping them to reconcile a sense of responsibility with emotional fulfilment.

His Moon is in tension with Jupiter

Your child probably has a heightened emotional sensitivity, accompanied by a rich and sometimes overflowing imagination. They may have a great need for affection, recognition and pleasure, but they may also be excessive in their reactions or expectations. This can take the form of a tendency to exaggerate their emotions, dramatise certain situations or constantly seek out new experiences, often to fill an emotional void or a need for stimulation.

He may also oscillate between two opposing attitudes. At times, they may seem passive, preferring to dream or indulge their immediate desires, without worrying about limits or responsibilities. At other times, they may want to impress, to conform to the expectations of others, or to show great concern for their place in a group or family, to the point of neglecting their own emotional needs.

As a parent, it's essential to help them find a balance between these two tendencies. Teach them the importance of moderating their expectations, while valuing their efforts and showing them that they can find satisfaction both in their dreams and in the concrete construction of their projects. Teach them to recognise their emotions, to manage them in a healthy way, and to understand that relationships with others sometimes require patience and compromise.

His Moon is in tension with Mars

Your child may show strong emotional reactions, often tinged with strong impulsivity. They are probably very sensitive, but this is sometimes expressed in an intense way, with sudden mood swings or outbursts. They may also feel frustrated, which they express through fits of anger, impatient attitudes or a constant need to move and act.

Two tendencies may emerge from this inner conflict. At times, they may withdraw into themselves, seeking to avoid challenges or run away from situations where they sense confrontation. At other times, they may overreact, trying to impose themselves or prove their ability to overcome obstacles, sometimes to the detriment of their emotional balance.

As a parent, it's important to help them channel this boundless energy and express their emotions constructively. Teach them to recognise their feelings, verbalise their frustrations and find positive ways of dealing with their emotions, such as through play, sport or creative activities. Offer them a safe and stable environment, but also give them opportunities to explore and take on age-appropriate challenges.

Praise his efforts when he manages to manage his energy or overcome a difficulty, while teaching him that strength lies not only in action, but also in patience and reflection. By helping them to balance these two strengths, you will help them to develop healthy self-confidence, resilience and the ability to assert themselves without excess.

His Moon is in tension with Mercury

Your child has a fertile imagination and a natural curiosity, but he may sometimes seem torn between his inner world and external demands. They may find it difficult to express their feelings clearly, or to fully understand what others expect of them emotionally. At times, he may be very talkative, moving from one subject to another, but his words may not always reflect his true emotions. At other times, they may retreat into their inner world, becoming silent or distracted, as if absorbed in daydreams.

Your child may also show a degree of instability in their concentration: they are interested in many things, but find it difficult to go into depth or stay focused on a single task.

This can make them changeable, even unpredictable, in their reactions or interests.

As a parent, it is essential to help your child harmonise these two dimensions. Encourage them to express their emotions through speech or writing, by offering them a caring, non-judgemental place to listen. Help them to structure their thoughts and activities, while respecting their need to dream and connect with their inner world.

You can suggest activities that combine expression and reflection, such as telling stories, keeping a diary, or playing games that stimulate both imagination and logic. Show them that their ideas and emotions can coexist fluidly, and teach them to put their feelings into words.

Her Moon is in tension with Venus

Your child often seems to oscillate between a need for emotional security and a quest for external attention or approval. They can be very emotionally sensitive, sometimes feeling insecure or hesitant when it comes to expressing affection. At times, they may insistently seek demonstrations of love and tenderness, seeking reassurance about their place in your heart or in the hearts of others. At other times, they prefer to withdraw into a bubble of familiar comfort, avoiding any situation where they might feel vulnerable or judged.

They can also be fickle in their tastes and friendships: what attracts them today can quickly lose interest. This emotional instability can give the impression that he's wavering between attachment and lightness. However, this behaviour reflects an inner quest: they are trying to understand how to balance their need for emotional security with their desire for pleasure and acceptance.

As a parent, it is important to offer your child an environment that is both warm and structured. Show them that their feelings, however changeable, are valid and deserve to be welcomed. Encourage them to develop solid friendships and to enjoy activities that nurture their creativity while reinforcing their emotional stability , such as drawing, music or arts and crafts.

Help them to understand that they can enjoy life's pleasures and build lasting relationships at the same time. Show them, by your example, that it is possible to combine deep love with personal fulfilment.

His Mercury is in tension with Pluto

Your child has an intense intellectual curiosity, often accompanied by a depth of thought that is unusual for their age. However, this combination can also create challenges in the way they communicate and process information. He may tend to keep certain thoughts or ideas to himself, analysing and reinterpreting them obsessively, which can make his exchanges sometimes complex or loaded with implicit emotions. It's not uncommon for them to ask questions that seem simple on the surface but reveal a need to understand things at a much deeper level.

Your child may also be subject to power struggles in their verbal interactions, sometimes finding it difficult to accept other points of view or feeling frustrated when they fail to convince or make themselves understood. This may lead him to adopt indirect strategies, such as the use of innuendo or even some form of intellectual manipulation. Conversely, they may feel uneasy about ideas or opinions that challenge their certainties, sometimes preferring to avoid delving into certain subjects for fear of what they might discover.

As a parent, it's important to support their need to explore and understand, while teaching them the importance of clarity and openness in communication. Encourage them to share their ideas without fear and to ask questions, even if they don't have all the answers. Help them to recognise that questioning their own opinions or discovering new truths can be a rewarding experience, not a threatening one.

To feed their minds and help them channel their intensity, offer activities that encourage in-depth thinking, such as stimulating reading or investigative games. You can also help them learn to listen actively and discuss things constructively.

His Mercury is in tension with Neptune

Your child has a vivid imagination and extraordinary mental sensitivity, but may sometimes find it difficult to clearly distinguish reality from their daydreams or personal interpretations. This can manifest itself in a tendency to become distracted, confused or hard to follow. They may have difficulty structuring their ideas or expressing their subtle perceptions clearly. On the other hand, your child is capable of picking up on emotions, moods or ideas that others might ignore, but still lacks the tools to translate all this in an understandable and organised way.

They may lose themselves in daydreams, distancing themselves from the concrete world and immediate tasks, or find it difficult to concentrate on precise instructions. Conversely, they may reject or play down their own intuitions, trying to rationalise everything without leaving any room for their imagination . This imbalance can lead to misunderstandings, both in their understanding of the world and in their interactions with others.

As a parent, you can help by providing an environment that encourages both creativity and practicality. Encourage them to share their ideas and structure their thoughts through writing games, drawings or open discussions. When you notice that they are having difficulty concentrating or clarifying what they want to say, guide them patiently and kindly by rephrasing or asking simple questions to help them get their bearings.

You can also teach them to distinguish facts from impressions or beliefs, without denying their sensitivity. You can encourage them to develop a balance between their rich inner world and tangible reality.

Her Mercury is in a tension aspect to Uranus

Your child has an exceptionally quick mind and an insatiable curiosity, but these qualities can sometimes translate into mental agitation and difficulty in channelling their thoughts. His mind is often full of new and unexpected ideas, but he may have difficulty organising them or expressing them coherently. This tension can also manifest itself in impatience with traditional learning or slow conversations, as they pick up and process information at an unusual speed.

Your child may have a tendency to oppose received ideas or established rules, preferring to explore unconventional avenues. They may also show an intense need for intellectual freedom, sometimes to the detriment of discipline or concentration on specific tasks. At times, they may appear distracted or reactive, rejecting explanations without taking the time to explore or discuss them calmly.

As a parent, you can help by creating a stimulating but structured environment that values their inventive spirit while helping them develop the tools to organise and channel their ideas. Encourage them to explore their interests in depth, while teaching them to listen to and respect other people's points of view. For example, you could suggest activities that combine creativity and logic, such as puzzle games, experimental science or writing imaginative stories.

Help your child to understand that he can share his brilliant ideas without imposing his opinions or feeling threatened by those of others. Teach them to take their time to think, ask questions and formulate their thoughts constructively.

His Mercury is in a tension aspect to Saturn

Your child has a natural ability to think deeply and take his ideas seriously, but this can sometimes lead to a certain restraint or difficulty in expressing himself. He may tend to feel intimidated by complex subjects or situations where he has to explain his thoughts, for fear of making a mistake or not being up to the job. At times, they may become locked into overly rigid reasoning, seeking absolute certainties at the expense of spontaneity and exploration.

Conversely, your child may also oscillate between this excessive seriousness and a desire to skim over things, avoiding delving into his ideas for fear of devoting too much time or energy to them. In such cases, they may appear scattered, throwing out lots of ideas without trying to organise them or draw solid conclusions from them.

As a parent, you can play a key role in helping him to balance these two tendencies. Encourage them to express their ideas without fear of making mistakes, reminding them that mistakes are part of learning. Create a reassuring environment where he can ask questions, experiment with his ideas, and develop structured thinking while remaining open and curious.

Activities such as writing, logic games or playing a musical instrument can help them to concentrate and structure their thoughts. Teach them the importance of taking a step back from their ideas and confronting them with reality in a constructive way.

His Mercury is in a tension aspect to Jupiter

Your child has a lively curiosity and an overflowing imagination, but this can sometimes lead to excesses in the way they think or communicate. They may, for example, exaggerate their ideas or stories, promise things they can't always keep, or attach disproportionate importance to details that seem fascinating but lack coherence in the wider context.

On the other hand, he can also be resistant to ideas or perspectives that don't match his vision at the time. When he feels in disagreement or that something does not correspond to his expectations, he may persist in his positions without seeking to examine other points of view.

As a parent, it is important to teach them to balance their intellectual enthusiasm with a sense of moderation and reflection. Value their curiosity while helping them to organise their ideas in a coherent and realistic way. Encourage them to take their time to think things through before expressing themselves or committing themselves to projects, by explaining the importance of carefully weighing up their words and decisions.

Games or activities that combine imagination and logic, such as puzzles, supervised debates or story writing, can help them to structure their thinking while developing their ability to argue in a balanced way.

His Mercury is in a tension aspect to Mars

Your child has a lively mental energy and is quick to react, but this can sometimes manifest itself in impulsive behaviour or difficulty in finding the right balance between reflection and action. They may, for example, speak in a hurry, interrupt frequently, or become easily irritated when exchanges don't go the way they want. His communication can be lively, sometimes too direct, and he may tend to engage in heated discussions or retaliate impulsively to disagreements.

On the other hand, when they focus exclusively on action, they may find it difficult to express their ideas or listen calmly to others, preferring to get on with the job straight away without taking the time to think or consider their words. This can sometimes lead to misunderstandings or unnecessary arguments.

As a parent, it's important to help them channel this energy by showing them how to alternate between moments of reflection and moments of action. Encourage them to pause before responding when they're upset, and to use tools such as writing or drawing to express their ideas more calmly. You can also teach them breathing or relaxation techniques to help them manage their emotional reactions.

Sporting activities or strategy games can be particularly beneficial for them, as they allow them to exploit their dynamism while developing their ability to plan and think before they act.

Her Venus is in tension with Pluto

Your child has intense emotional sensitivity and great depth of feeling, but this can sometimes lead to complex or contradictory emotions. They may show mistrust or possessiveness towards those they love, or on the contrary, avoid becoming attached for fear of being hurt. In some cases, they may oscillate between a need for emotional fusion and a marked distance, as if afraid of losing control or revealing their vulnerabilities.

Your child may also be fascinated by concepts or stories about mystery, loss or transformation, reflecting a natural curiosity about things that go beyond appearance. However, he may find it difficult to manage these powerful emotions without feeling overwhelmed or worried. Sometimes, he may express these tensions through jealousy or an intense need for attention.

As a parent, it's important to be gentle with your child to help them understand and name their emotions. Encourage them to express their feelings, whether through words, art or creative activities. Show them that strong emotions are not dangerous, but can be a source of understanding and inner strength.

He can also benefit from an environment where the emotional bonds are clear and secure, without ambiguity or unspoken words. Help them to cultivate a sense of emotional security while encouraging them to explore the richness of their feelings without fear of rejection or loss.

His Venus is in tension aspect to Neptune

Your child is gifted with great emotional sensitivity and a fertile imagination that gives his relationships a special glow. They aspire to pure, ideal love, but this quest can sometimes leave them vulnerable to misunderstanding or disappointment. They tend to see others through the prism of their dreams and expectations, which can lead them to idealise their friends or feel hurt when they don't live up to their expectations.

Your child may also have difficulty distinguishing between reality and emotional fantasies. They may get carried away by intense emotions that overwhelm them, or by dreams of perfect friendships or relationships that always seem out of reach. At times, they may display avoidance behaviours or seem lost in a rich inner world that is difficult to share.

As a parent, it's important to help your child develop a more realistic and balanced view of relationships. Help them to develop discernment by discussing their feelings with them and encouraging them to share their emotions. Offer them a clear and reassuring emotional framework to help them understand that their feelings, while precious, must not cut them off from reality or leave them disillusioned.

Encourage them to express their creativity through activities such as drawing, music or writing, which can help them channel their inner world. Show them that human relationships, while imperfect, can be enriching and beautiful when they are based on authenticity and mutual understanding.

His Venus is in tension with Uranus

Your child's emotional nature can seem both unpredictable and intense. They seek unique and authentic bonds, but their emotional needs often oscillate between a desire for warm attachment and a thirst for absolute freedom. This can lead to contradictory behaviour: at times, they show a marked need for affection and approval, while at other times they abruptly withdraw, asserting their independence.

Your child may show a certain impatience or difficulty in managing emotions such as frustration in relationships. He may be attracted by originality or by friendships that are out of the ordinary, but he may also find it difficult to accept the compromises needed to maintain stable relationships. They may sometimes appear rebellious or unpredictable in their interactions, reflecting their need to feel free yet loved.

As a parent, it's important to help them learn to balance their need for attachment with their desire for independence. Show them that affection is not incompatible with personal freedom. Encourage them to express their emotions, even those they might find embarrassing, such as fear of rejection or feelings of vulnerability.

Help them to understand that relationships can evolve without losing their authenticity, and that disagreements or tensions do not mean the end of a bond. Offer them an environment that values both their originality and their ability to maintain sincere and respectful relationships.

His Venus is in a tension aspect to Saturn

Your child may have a particular emotional sensitivity, marked by a tendency to hold back or control the expression of their feelings. He or she may find it difficult to express affection or to feel fully at ease in close relationships, for fear of not being loved or accepted in return. This attitude may reflect a fear of being vulnerable or a fear of failure in interactions.

Your child may sometimes appear distant or reserved, seeking to establish solid, secure relationships but hesitant to open up completely. They may also feel responsible beyond their years, as if they have to earn love and attention through their actions or achievements. This pressure can make them critical of themselves and sometimes of others, especially if they perceive implicit expectations that they feel they must meet.

As a parent, you can help your child develop emotional confidence by valuing their emotions and showing them that love does not depend on their performance or success. Take care to offer constant encouragement and unconditional affection. Teach them that relationships aren't perfect and that it's normal to be vulnerable or to make mistakes in their interactions.

Also encourage him to cultivate patience and give relationships time to develop naturally. Help him to understand that responsibilities and feelings can coexist without becoming a burden. By teaching him the balance between reason and feeling, and by reinforcing his self-esteem, you will enable him to build harmonious relationships based on mutual respect and trust.

His Venus is in tension aspect to Jupiter

Your child may have an emotional nature that is both expansive and complex, often seeking to please and feel loved, while sometimes overstepping certain limits in their relationships or expectations. They may have a tendency to seek immediate gratification or constant attention, which can manifest itself in a sometimes excessive quest for pleasure, whether through play, friendships or leisure activities.

At other times, your child may be more focused on bigger goals, to the point of neglecting the importance of emotional ties or their own emotional needs. This to-and-fro between the need to expand and emotional neglect can lead to misunderstandings in relationships with peers or close friends.

As a parent, it is essential to help your child find a balance between these two tendencies. Encourage them to enjoy moments of pleasure while teaching them the value of moderation and responsibility in their choices. Show them that love and affection are not only linked to rewards or success, but that they also flourish in the simplicity and authenticity of relationships.

Support them in managing their expectations, in particular by teaching them to accept that not everything can be perfect or conform to their desires. Help them to develop self-esteem that does not depend exclusively on external validation.

His Venus is in a tension aspect to Mars

Your child may display an inner dynamic marked by tensions between his need for affection and his need for self-assertion. On the one hand, he may enthusiastically seek attention or love, but on the other, he may quickly become impulsive or abrupt in his actions, which can blur his emotional intentions. For example, they may want to play or get closer to a playmate, but express this too energetically or awkwardly, which can lead to misunderstandings.

He may also alternate between phases where he imposes his will in a strong manner, disregarding the feelings of others, and phases where he is very seductive or charming, waiting for things to come to him without making any effort to deserve them. This back-and-forth can be confusing for him and those around him.

As a parent, you can help your child to understand these two tendencies. Help them to express their emotions and needs clearly and gently, while showing them how to act constructively and respectfully towards others. Value his outbursts of affection and enthusiasm, but also guide him towards a more measured management of his energy and expectations.

Encourage him to recognise that his actions have an impact on others and that affection and attention are not won by force, but by sincere and balanced gestures. By finding common ground between his desire to assert himself and his need to be loved, he will learn to build more harmonious relationships and better express his feelings.

His Mars is in a tension aspect to Pluto

Your child carries an emotional intensity and powerful energy that is often difficult to channel. They can be determined and combative, but also sensitive to fears or frustrations that they don't always express openly. When they feel upset or powerless in the face of a situation, they may react explosively or, on the contrary, withdraw and brood over their emotions. This tension between their need to act and deep-seated anxieties can sometimes lead them to engage in power struggles, even with those closest to them.

Your child may also have difficulty managing his anger or desires, alternating between moments when he tries to control everything and others when he seems to feel overwhelmed by forces he does not yet understand. It is essential to help them recognise and accept their emotions, while offering constructive ways of expressing them.

As a parent, you can support them by teaching them to observe their feelings and reactions without judgement. Help them to put into words what is upsetting them and encourage them to turn their frustrations into positive actions. Show them that it is possible to assert themselves without having to enter into conflict. Intense physical or creative activities, such as sport, martial arts or drawing, can be invaluable outlets for channelling their energy. Finally, make him understand that his inner strength is a rich resource. By learning to combine his natural dynamism with gentle, constructive introspection, he can develop great resilience and a unique ability to turn challenges into opportunities for growth. Be patient and support him on this journey, as it can make him a deeply authentic and persevering person.

His Mars is in a tension aspect to Neptune

Your child has a vivid imagination and a sensitivity that colours everything he does. However, this configuration can create tensions between their need to act and their rich, fluid inner world. They can sometimes be hesitant, confused about which direction to take, or embark on projects without a clear vision of the desired results. His bursts of energy may be held back by doubts or daydreams that distract him from immediate reality.

In certain situations, he may tend to avoid conflict or necessary confrontation, preferring to take refuge in an imaginary world or in a quest for ideal harmony. Conversely, they may become agitated, as if trying to prove something to themselves, but without always taking into account their feelings or intuitions. These contradictions can frustrate him and blur his sense of direction.

As a parent, you can help them by providing a clear and secure framework, while encouraging their imagination and creativity . Help them to distinguish between their achievable dreams and their utopias, by guiding them step by step towards concrete actions that make the most of their talents. Show them that it is possible to combine the power of action with inner listening.

Support him in developing his self-confidence, by teaching him to trust his intuition without getting lost in it, and to defend his vital space with serenity. Activities such as theatre, dance or gentle sports can help them to harmonise their energy and express it in a positive way. With your support, they will learn to channel their sensitivity into strength and move forward with confidence.

His Mars is in a tension aspect to Uranus

Your child is driven by a lively energy and a pressing need to explore, take action and stand out from the crowd. However, this configuration can sometimes make them impulsive, impatient and in search of immediate freedom, to the point of rejecting any form of constraint or authority. They can be unpredictable in their reactions, moving quickly from overflowing enthusiasm to intense frustration. This tension between their desire for emancipation and their willingness to act can lead them to make impulsive decisions or take on challenges that are difficult to master.

Your child may also be attracted by constant change, always looking for new experiences without necessarily building on what they've started. This need for novelty can lead to instability, especially if they have difficulty channelling their energy constructively. On the other hand, they may sometimes persist in repetitive behaviour, as if trying to resist a change that deep down they feel is necessary.

As a parent, you play a crucial role in helping your child tame this energy. Offer them an environment that allows them to explore their need for freedom while teaching them the importance of patience and reflection. Help them to understand that change, while essential, must be prepared for with care. You can encourage them to get involved in creative activities or dynamic sports that allow them to channel their energy in a positive way.

Show them that independence is acquired by developing clear strategies and considering the consequences of their actions. Help them to see constraints as opportunities to grow and excel, rather than as obstacles to their freedom.

His Mars is in a tension aspect to Saturn

Your child may show a paradoxical combination of energy and restraint. Sometimes they seem hesitant or reserved when it comes to taking action or asserting themselves, as if held back by a fear of failure or of not being up to the task. This caution may mask frustration, as they feel a natural need to express their strength and will, but often feel limited by a sense of insecurity or by fears that they cannot always explain. At other times, they may try to compensate for these blockages by being very assertive, even a little aggressive, trying to prove to themselves and to others that they can go beyond their limits.

Your child is likely to be sensitive to criticism and to withdraw into himself when he feels misunderstood or judged for his assertiveness. This combination of Martian energy and Saturnian control can make them perfectionists, demanding of themselves and sometimes hard on others. He may also find it difficult to deal with frustration when he fails to achieve his goals as quickly as he would like.

As a parent, you can help them find a balance between action and reflection. Encourage them to take the time to work out their plans without allowing themselves to be paralysed by excessive self-doubt. Value their efforts as much as their results, and show them that failure is an integral part of learning. Offer them activities that allow them to structure their energy constructively, such as strategic sports or manual projects where they can plan and put their ideas into practice.

Help him to understand that patience and perseverance are strengths, but that it's also important to act with confidence and accept that some decisions require adjustments along the way. Your benevolent support will help them to develop greater self-control, while at the same time enhancing their fighting strength and their ability to build lasting things with care and precision.

His Mars is in a tension aspect to Jupiter

Your child may sometimes seem torn between bursts of enthusiasm and fits of anger or impatience. Their boundless energy and natural optimism often drive them to undertake ambitious things, but they sometimes have trouble measuring the limits or consequences of their actions. At times, they may want to impose their ideas or beliefs with great intensity, trying to convince those around them that they are right or that they know the best way. At other times, they may avoid direct confrontation, preferring to take refuge in ideals or dreams rather than face reality or external constraints.

Your child may also have a complex relationship with rules and standards. Sometimes they confront them with combative energy, sometimes they ignore them, believing that they don't apply to them. This mixture of daring and spontaneity can be fascinating, but also exhausting for them and those around them. It's essential to teach them to channel this energy wisely, by showing them that major projects require reflection and a certain discipline to succeed.

As a parent, encourage them to explore activities where they can combine action and reflection, such as team sports, debates or projects that require both creativity and structure . Teach them to take the time to listen to other people's ideas and to moderate their enthusiasm so that they can build harmonious relationships. Remind them that it is possible to be ambitious while respecting the rules of the game, and that sometimes diplomacy and patience are just as important as boldness and the will to act.

His Ascendant is in tension with Pluto

Your child may show great intensity in their interactions with others and in the way they express their personality. He often seems defensive, as if anticipating that others might judge or exploit his weaknesses. This posture can sometimes lead them to adopt behaviours that do not really reflect who they are deep down, but which serve as a protective "shell". Your child may also have a keen sense of the dynamics of relationships, making them very sensitive to what others think or feel about them.

They may find it difficult to feel totally at ease with themselves, as if they sometimes doubted their own worth or feared being misunderstood. This inner tension can lead to phases where they question everything, trying to understand themselves better, but not always knowing where to start.

As a parent, it is essential to offer them a safe space where they can express their emotions and concerns without fear of being judged. Help them to understand that showing their vulnerabilities is not a weakness, but a strength that can strengthen their relationships. Encourage them to explore activities that stimulate their imagination or interest in the mysteries of life, such as reading, art or age-appropriate philosophical reflection.

Remind them that what others think of them can be a source of learning, but that they should not make it an absolute truth. With support, your child will be able to transform this intensity into a strength that will enable them to get to know themselves better, develop an authentic personality and feel more at ease in their relationships with others.

His Ascendant is in tension with Neptune

Your child often seems lost between his own emotions and those of others, as if he has difficulty drawing a clear line between himself and his environment. They may have an overactive imagination and heightened sensitivity, making them particularly receptive to the moods and needs of others. However, this receptiveness can also make them vulnerable to confusion or to the influence of the emotions and opinions of those around them.

Your child may sometimes have difficulty asserting themselves or defining themselves clearly, preferring to avoid conflict by adapting to the expectations of others. This may give the impression that they are "floating" in a world of their own, or that they are reluctant to show who they really are. They may also go through phases of withdrawal, seeking refuge in dreams, imaginative play or solitary activities.

As a parent, it's important to provide them with a clear and secure framework while respecting their unique sensibilities. Encourage them to express their emotions and develop creative activities where they can channel their imagination, such as drawing, music or theatre. Help them to understand that adapting to others is a valuable quality, but that they also need to learn to set limits in order to preserve their identity.

Your support will help them learn to navigate their rich inner life while developing a better understanding of themselves and others.

His Ascendant is in tension aspect to Uranus

Your child has an original and unpredictable personality, sometimes marked by a strong desire for freedom and independence. They can seem hard to pin down, because they change their desires, ideas and attitudes quickly, and often need to feel unique in what they do. This can manifest itself in a tendency to reject constraints or rules that seem arbitrary, seeking to assert their autonomy from an early age.

Your child may also have great creativity and the ability to think outside the box, but these qualities are sometimes accompanied by difficulty in adapting to the expectations of others. They may react in unexpected ways, particularly when they feel restricted in their personal expression.

As a parent, it's essential to strike a balance between providing them with a clear, structured framework, while respecting their need for freedom and exploration. Encourage them to express their ideas and follow their passions, but also teach them to recognise when they need to cooperate and respect certain rules.

Your support will help them understand that their quest for freedom and authenticity can go hand in hand with a balanced social life. This will enable them to learn something about themselves through activities that value their originality.

His Ascendant is in a tension aspect to Saturn

Your child may seem serious or reserved, even from an early age, as if carrying an invisible burden. Their self-image may sometimes lack spontaneity, and they may be cautious, even hesitant, in their interactions with others. They may tend to withdraw into themselves when they feel vulnerable, unconsciously seeking to protect themselves from judgement or failure.

This influence can make them particularly sensitive to criticism, which can reinforce a certain rigidity or difficulty in opening up to others. However, this reserve can also give them a great capacity for reflection and an unusual maturity for their age. They are often very aware of their responsibilities and may seek to do well in everything they undertake, sometimes at the cost of putting excessive pressure on themselves.

As a parent, it's crucial to provide them with an environment that values their efforts without overburdening them with excessively high expectations. Help them to see their strengths and qualities, and encourage them to develop their self-confidence gradually. Support him in his moments of doubt, while teaching him that mistakes are part of learning and do not call his worth into question.

In addition, make sure you encourage him to explore physical or creative activities that help him to develop his body and mind in a balanced way. These activities can not only boost his self-confidence, but also offer him a healthy outlet for any frustrations or doubts he may have.

His Ascendant is in tension aspect to Jupiter

Your child may have an expansive personality, but this boundless energy can sometimes lack direction or measure. They tend to want to explore the world enthusiastically, often with an insatiable appetite for new experiences. However, this natural drive can push them over the edge, both in their behaviour and in their expectations of themselves and others. They may sometimes appear excessive, seeking to impress or exaggerate their achievements.

Your child also has a strong need for recognition and can sometimes feel frustrated if his efforts do not receive the appreciation he hopes for. This can lead to attitudes that oscillate between overconfidence and doubt, with seeking a balance between his desire to shine and the reality of the limits he must learn to respect.

As a parent, it's essential to channel this energy by encouraging him to explore his interests while teaching him the importance of moderation and patience. Help them to understand that greatness does not lie in excess, but in a balanced and thoughtful exploration of their talents and opportunities.

Value their successes while showing them that failures are also learning stages. Teach them to respect the rules and cultivate humility without curbing their natural enthusiasm. Activities that combine discovery and structure, such as educational trips, team sports or artistic projects, can help them channel their boundless energy in a positive way.

His Ascendant is in a tension aspect to Mars

Your child has strong energy and willpower, which can translate into a dynamic but sometimes impulsive personality. They have an intense desire to assert their identity and take their place, but this quest can sometimes lead them to adopt behaviour that is perceived as abrupt or confrontational. When your child feels upset or misunderstood, they may react with anger or frustration, trying to impose themselves without always taking into account the needs or feelings of others.

However, behind this sometimes explosive energy lies a deep need for recognition and a quest for balance between their desire for autonomy and their ability to cooperate. Your child wants to be seen and respected for what he is, but he needs to learn to express his strength in a constructive and respectful way.

As a parent, it's crucial to provide them with a clear and coherent framework, while rewarding their efforts to assert themselves. Encourage them to channel their energy into physical or creative activities, such as sport or martial arts, which will allow them to express their vitality while developing discipline and respect for rules. Help them to understand that they can defend their ideas and assert their personality without having to crush others or systematically enter into conflict.

With your support, they will be able to develop healthy self-confidence and learn to assert themselves in a balanced way, taking into account everyone's place and rights.

His Ascendant is in tension with the Sun

Your child has a powerful inner energy and a deep desire to be recognised for their unique personality. However, this aspect can create tension between their need to stand out and the expectations or rules imposed by those around them. They may feel a conflict between their desire to assert their identity and the need to fit in with a group or society. This can sometimes lead to defiant, rebellious or uncooperative behaviour.

Your child may be excessively attention-seeking or have difficulty accepting authority, perceiving limits as obstacles to self-expression. This can create friction, particularly with authority figures, whether at home or at school. They may also have difficulty feeling fully accepted for who they are, which can lead to feelings of frustration or a quest for validation that leads them to adopt sometimes excessive or dramatic postures.

As a parent, it is essential to give your child the space to express his ideas and personality, while setting clear and consistent limits. Help them to understand that they can shine their own light without trying to provoke or place themselves in constant opposition. Encourage them to channel their energy into activities where they can feel valued and recognised, such as creative projects, sports or artistic performances, where they can not only distinguish themselves but also learn to work with others.

It is also important to encourage them to develop a positive view of themselves, helping them to recognise their qualities without the need to constantly compare themselves to others.

His Ascendant is in tension aspect to the Moon

Your child is particularly sensitive to his environment and to the reactions of others, which can sometimes lead to behaviour that oscillates between great emotional expression and withdrawal. This can lead to an inner conflict between their need to assert their personality and a tendency to adjust to the emotional expectations of others, often to the detriment of their own needs. Your child may seem unpredictable at times, as their emotions strongly influence their behaviour and the way they interact with the world.

They may also have difficulty separating their own feelings from those of others, which can make them very empathetic, but also vulnerable to outside influences. This can lead to a need for attention or reassurance, particularly if your child does not feel sufficiently secure or understood. Conversely, they may also be distant or reluctant to express their feelings, for fear of rejection or misunderstanding.

As a parent, it's important to recognise and validate your child's emotions, even when they seem disproportionate or difficult to understand. Offer them a reassuring environment where they can express themselves freely, without fear of being judged. Help them to put their feelings into words, so that they can learn to manage their emotions more constructively.

Encourage him to develop his self-confidence, by valuing his successes and helping him to understand that he can find a balance between his emotional needs and his personal affirmation. Soothing activities such as drawing, music or simply spending some quiet time with you can help him refocus.

His Ascendant is in tension aspect to Mercury

Your child is curious and full of questions, but this can sometimes indicate a difficulty in communicating or being understood. They may be torn between the desire to express their ideas freely and the fear of not being heard or taken seriously. They may be very talkative in certain situations, seeking to draw attention to their thoughts, or, on the contrary, withdraw into themselves when their efforts to communicate do not meet with the hoped-for response.

This aspect can also lead to a tendency to question everything, and even their own reasoning. This can make them hesitant or scattered, especially when they feel judged. What's more, they may be tempted to use their words to attract attention or defend themselves, which can lead to tense or confrontational exchanges with those around them.

As a parent, you can help your child by valuing their ability to think and express their ideas, even when they seem clumsy or incomplete. Create an environment where they feel free to ask questions and explore their thoughts without fear of judgement. Help them to structure their thinking and organise their ideas, while encouraging them to listen to others to better understand different perspectives.

If your child seems frustrated in his communication, encourage activities that allow him to express himself in other ways, such as writing, drawing or even imaginative games. This can help them develop confidence in their intellectual abilities and channel their alertness.

His Ascendant is in tension aspect to Venus

Your child may have a particular way of approaching relationships and social interactions, often marked by emotional ups and downs. This aspect of tension may indicate that they are seeking harmony and beauty, but that they sometimes encounter difficulties in expressing themselves or interacting with others. He may feel a strong need to be loved and appreciated, which makes him sensitive to external judgements and sometimes excessively dependent on the reactions of others.

In certain situations, they may behave in ways designed to please or attract attention, sometimes awkwardly or excessively, trying to conform to aesthetic or social ideals that do not always correspond to their true nature. This can lead to frustration or conflict, especially if they perceive differences between what they feel inside and what they think others expect of them.

Your child may also go through periods when their relationships with others are marked by a search for approval or validation. It's important to offer them an environment where they feel loved for who they are, without having to conform to external expectations. Show them that authenticity is more valuable than the simple desire to please and encourage them to express their emotions and tastes sincerely.

As a parent, you can help your child develop greater confidence in their own qualities by encouraging them to find creative and authentic ways of expressing themselves. Encourage them to explore artistic or cultural activities that allow them to feel in harmony with themselves and with others, without constantly trying to match an imposed ideal.

Astrological compatibility between a child and his parents

In this chapter, we explore a fascinating aspect of astrology: the compatibility between children and their parents according to their respective astrological charts

To understand the astrological compatibility between you and your child, it is essential to know the rule of compatibility of the elements. This rule will serve as a basis for analysing the relationships between the different astrological signs present in your child's natal chart and yours.

Compatibility rule for components :

-Fire (Aries, Leo, Sagittarius) is compatible with Air (Gemini, Libra, Aquarius). However, Fire is incompatible with Earth (Taurus, Virgo, Capricorn).

-Earth (Taurus, Virgo, Capricorn) is compatible with Water (Cancer, Scorpio, Pisces). On the other hand, Earth is incompatible with Air (Gemini, Libra, Aquarius).

-Air (Gemini, Libra, Aquarius) is compatible with Fire (Aries, Leo, Sagittarius). But Air can have difficulty understanding Earth (Taurus, Virgo, Capricorn).

-Water (Cancer, Scorpio, Pisces) is compatible with Earth (Taurus, Virgo, Capricorn). However, Water is at odds with Fire (Aries, Leo, Sagittarius).

To give you a clearer idea of some of the terms we'll be using in the context of affinities, here are some explanations of what a tense aspect and a harmonious aspect mean in astrology:

Definition of aspects :

A tension aspect occurs when the angle between two planets in a natal chart is close to 90° (square) or 180° (opposition) or 0° (conjunction with Mars, Saturn, Uranus and Pluto). These aspects are seen as dynamic configurations that create challenges, friction or conflicts between the energies of the planets concerned. They can indicate points of tension or areas of life where adjustments are needed in order to evolve. In the context of a parent-child relationship, an aspect of tension can result in discordant behaviour or out-of-sync reactions, requiring special attention to restore balance.

A harmonious aspect occurs when the angle between two planets is 60° (sextile) or 120° (trine) or 0° (conjunction with the Sun, Moon, Mercury, Venus and Jupiter). These aspects favour fluidity and cooperation between the energies of the planets, generating soothing and constructive exchanges. They indicate areas where the relationship is more fluid, allowing both parties to flourish together without undue effort. In the relationship between parent and child, a harmonious aspect suggests an intuitive connection, mutual understanding and pleasant, natural interactions.

Ideal compatibility

Compatibility is ideal when the child's Sun sign element is identical or compatible with the Sun sign element of each parent.

For example, imagine a child whose Sun is in Cancer. He or she will get along very well with parents whose Sun is in Cancer, Scorpio or Pisces.

Everyday compatibility

When it comes to astrological compatibility between a child and his or her parents, comparing their Moon signs is essential. The Moon represents the emotional sphere, states of mind and daily needs, including biological rhythms, eating habits and rest. If the elements of a parent's and child's Moon signs are identical or compatible, their mutual understanding on an emotional and daily level will be natural and fluid. They will share synchronised rhythms and a common instinct for the needs of each day, which will reinforce coherence in their exchanges and their life together. On the other hand, if these elements are incompatible, divergences may arise, creating gaps in habits, schedules and emotional management. In this case, greater patience and attentive listening will be needed to adjust expectations and encourage lasting harmony.

Compatibility in terms of communication

To assess the communication compatibility between a child and a parent, it is essential to compare the Mercury sign of each. Mercury represents the way a being communicates, understands and interprets the world around them. When the elements of a child's and a parent's Mercury signs are identical or compatible, mutual understanding is fluid and natural. On the other hand, if these elements are incompatible, communication may require more patience, listening and effort to achieve mutual understanding.

Understanding the compatibility between Mercury signs helps parents to adjust the way they communicate with their children. A harmonious relationship is based on recognising differences and making a conscious effort to overcome potential incompatibilities.

Emotional compatibility

In the chapter on astrological compatibility between a child and his or her parents, it is essential to compare the Venus signs of each. Venus represents the way affection is expressed and perceived, which directly influences the quality of emotional interactions. If the elements of the parent's and child's Venus signs are identical or compatible, a natural and harmonious understanding will develop on an emotional and affective level. On the other hand, if the elements are incompatible, it may require more effort, patience and listening on the part of the parent to adapt to their child's needs and understand the way they express their affection.

Compatibility in terms of energy expenditure

In the chapter on astrological compatibility between a child and his or her parents, it is also important to compare the Mars signs of each. Mars represents the way energy is spent, the way people act and defend themselves, which influences dynamic interactions and activities involving strength or determination. If the elements of the parent's and child's Mars signs are identical or compatible, they share a fluid and natural understanding of each other's activities and the way they interact when it comes to spending energy. However, if the elements are incompatible, this can lead to power relations at odds with each other, making interactions more difficult. In this case, patience and listening skills are needed to understand each person's needs and way of doing things. Knowing these aspects allows you to adjust your expectations and create appropriate activities, strengthening the bond with your child.

Energy compatibility between you and your child

When using astrological analysis in Synastry, it is fascinating to consider the energetic interactions between a parent and child. This approach allows us to understand how the planets of each influence the other and contribute to the quality of their relationship. A harmonious aspect between the planets of both parties encourages relaxation and cooperation, creating an atmosphere conducive to mutual well-being. Conversely, aspects marked by tension can reveal challenges, disagreements or adjustments needed to improve cohabitation. Observing these exchanges helps us to better understand the dynamics of the relationship and to cultivate a more balanced and enriching bond between parent and child.

Your Sun is in tension with your child's Moon:

Don't systematically respond to their sensitivity with an authoritarian attitude. If your child shares his feelings with you, it's because he's trying to relieve his stress. At such times, they want emotional support, not advice. Simply listen with empathy.

Your Sun is in harmonious aspect with your child's Moon:

Your Sun is in harmonious aspect with your child's Moon:

You radiate an energy that nourishes and soothes your child's emotional needs, while he or she seems instinctively receptive to your way of being and your values. Your child feels naturally supported by your presence and encouraged to explore his or her inner world in complete safety.

To make this harmony even stronger, make sure you continue to listen to and respect each other. By making the most of this complementary relationship, you'll be building a long-lasting, fulfilling relationship in which your child can grow up in a climate of trust and shared love.

Your Sun is in tension with your child's Mars:

There may be times when your instructions thwart your child's natural impulses. This can make them frustrated or hesitant, especially when they are trying to assert themselves and you react with overbearing behaviour. Don't impose a direction or course of action on them that they don't want to take or that doesn't suit them.

Your Sun is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mars:

You know how to give a precise direction to their impulses and highlight their intentions. When they come into contact with you, they become aware of their own strength and physical abilities, and feel strong, courageous and confident.

Your Moon is in tension with your child's Sun:

Your emotional sensitivity may be perceived as over-protective or intrusive by your child, while his need for autonomy and recognition may conflict with your desire for security and emotional closeness.

Recognise your child's need to assert himself in his own way, while sharing your emotions constructively. It's important to give them room to express themselves without over-mothering them

Your Moon is in tension with your child's Mars:

Your emotions and anxiety can sometimes get in the way of your child's initiatives. When he tries to assert himself, your emotional reactivity can throw him for a loop. This can make them nervous or reluctant to act freely.

Your Mercury is in tension with your child's Mercury:

Communication between you can sometimes be difficult and you don't always understand what your child is trying to tell you. Highlight your different points of view. For an effective discussion, choose a time and a place where you won't be disturbed, distracted or interrupted, and allow enough time for your child to fully understand or better express his/her ideas.

Your Mercury is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mercury:

Communication between the two of you is fluid. Your child feels naturally understood by you, and you manage to express your ideas and advice in a way that captures their attention and interest. Your exchanges are marked by mutual curiosity, respect for each other's ideas and an ability to work together to solve problems or explore subjects of common interest.

Your child will particularly appreciate your ability to listen and respond clearly and sympathetically. This harmonious aspect creates a stimulating intellectual environment, where each can learn from the other while developing a beautiful mental complicity.

To keep the momentum going, make sure you continue to encourage your child's curiosity and expression, while sharing your own thoughts openly.

Your Venus is in tension with your child's Venus:

The emotional connection between the two of you is not very fluid. This can reveal differences in the way you perceive and express your emotional needs, values or preferences. Your child may sometimes feel that your tastes or ways of showing love differ from theirs, which can lead to misunderstandings or a feeling of being out of step. You, for your part, may find it difficult to understand some of their emotional reactions or priorities in relationships.

Your child needs to feel that his choices and sensibilities, even if they differ from yours, are respected and taken into account. In return, you can encourage them to understand and value the diversity of ways of loving and appreciating things.

Your Venus is in harmonious aspect with your child's Venus :

There's a beautiful emotional resonance between the two of you. Your child is intuitively sensitive to your demonstrations of love and your values, and you also find pleasure in responding to his need for comfort and attention.

This harmony often manifests itself in similar tastes or shared preferences, whether in music, art, leisure or other expressions of beauty and pleasure.

This aspect encourages a relationship in which your child feels effortlessly loved and accepted, which boosts their self-confidence. Take advantage of this harmony to encourage their emotional development, helping them to develop a positive, balanced view of emotional relationships and the values they hold dear.

Your Venus is in tension with your child's Mars:

Your child may sometimes be impatient in his expectations. This can create moments of friction where you may perceive his energy as too demanding, while he may feel a lack of responsiveness or understanding on your part. He may feel weakened or disarmed by affectionate attention that doesn't match his state of mind at the time.

These differences can also manifest themselves in shared activities: you might prefer peace and harmony, while your child might seek challenges or more stimulating situations. This divergence is an opportunity for mutual learning. By guiding your child patiently, you can help them to balance their impulses with a greater awareness of other people's emotions.

To transform this tension into a constructive relationship, make sure you value his initiative and creativity while showing him the importance of gentleness and respect in interactions. In return, he can learn to channel his energy more positively, thereby strengthening the quality of your emotional bond.

Your Venus is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mars:

The way you express love and gentleness complements your child's dynamic energy . Your affectionate gestures find a natural echo in their enthusiasm and vitality. Your child feels encouraged and valued by your affection, while you are touched by his spontaneity and natural urge to act to please or impress you.

This harmony can also be reflected in your activities together: you find it easy to collaborate, whether on creative projects or moments of play, because your energies are perfectly balanced. You have the opportunity to transmit to him values of beauty, harmony and cooperation, while he inspires you to be more daring or expressive in your emotions and pleasures.

Your Mars is in a relaxed aspect to your child's Sun:

Your dynamism and energy stimulate your child and encourage him to pursue his goals. Your presence motivates them and they feel full of vitality and determination. Thanks to your support, they are better able to assert themselves and achieve what they want.

Your Mars is in a tension aspect to your child's Sun:

Your combative strength may be perceived by your child as a challenge to his need to shine naturally. This can lead to moments of friction, especially if you tend to impose your own pace or expectations, while your child tries to assert his will and fulfil himself.

Your child may react by becoming more determined or by subtly, or even directly, challenging your authority or your choices. This tension can be an opportunity to learn how to adjust the way you act and interact with your child. By adopting an approach that values his uniqueness and his need for recognition, you can transform this dynamic into fertile ground for his personal development and fulfilment.

To make the most of this aspect, try to channel this intense energy into constructive activities, such as collaborative projects or physical challenges where you work together rather than against each other. This will allow your child to feel actively supported by you, while giving them the freedom to express their unique light.

Your Mars is in tension with your child's Mercury:

Your child may hesitate to communicate with you if he fears that your reactions will be too strong. Listening attentively, without interrupting or criticising, is essential if they are to feel safe and understood.

Listen without interrupting. Give your opinion without criticising. Show your child that you respect their point of view. They need to feel understood and appreciated.

Your Mars is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mercury:

Your combative strength motivates your child to express his ideas clearly and confidently, while his thoughts and questions enrich your approach and your way of acting.

Your child will feel encouraged to explore new ideas, ask questions or share their thoughts without fear of being judged. For your part, you have the gift of turning their ideas into concrete actions or helping them to structure their projects effectively. This fluid exchange fosters a relationship where communication is both lively and constructive.

Your Mars is in tension with your child's Venus:

Your child may sometimes perceive your initiatives as too direct or intrusive, while you may find the way he expresses his affection a little out of sync with your expectations.

Your child is probably sensitive to the values of harmony and balance, but may find it difficult to reconcile their own needs with the strength of your will or your actions. This can lead to disagreements about how to act, make decisions or even manage emotional or creative relationships.

To help them feel at ease, adopt a more relaxed approach and let them come to you naturally. It's important to listen to each other and respect differences in pace and approach. Patience and gentleness are key to developing a harmonious emotional bond.

Your Mars is in harmonious aspect with your child's Venus :

This connection fosters a beautiful complementarity between your combative strength and your child's affectionate nature. Your child seems to appreciate your dynamism, which inspires him to express his creative talents or strengthen his relationships with ease and confidence. For your part, you know how to inspire positive emotions and awaken a loving bond with your child. Your way of interacting stimulates his joy and his desire to share. He feels attracted by your benevolent energy and opens up to moments of complicity.

Your Mars is in tension with your child's Mars:

Your child has a way of asserting himself that can sometimes clash with your own way of acting or directing things. Everyone can feel that the other is encroaching on their space. This can lead to disagreements, friction or irritation, especially in situations where everyone wants to impose their will or pace.

It is important to be open and sincere when tensions arise, to identify together what causes these moments of friction and to better understand your differences.

Your Mars is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mars:

Your energy and that of your child are perfectly matched, creating a dynamic and stimulating bond. You know how to motivate and inspire them. The harmony of your energy allows for enriching shared activities that strengthen your bond.

Your Jupiter is in a tension aspect to your child's Sun:

Your encouragement can sometimes be perceived as excessive, pushing your child beyond their capabilities. Your enthusiasm may be disproportionate to what he or she envisages and is capable of achieving. It's important to respect their limits and not project your own ambitions or ideals onto them, which are not necessarily their own.

Your Jupiter is in a relaxed aspect to your child's Sun:

Your presence and optimism boost your child's confidence and enthusiasm. You give them a positive energy that encourages them to explore new things and challenge themselves. Your support gives them a sense of security and well-being, and they are better able to seize opportunities with confidence.

Your Jupiter is in aspect to your child's Venus:

Your relationship brings warmth and a sense of comfort to your child, enriching their emotional life. You know how to make them happy and contribute to a harmonious and pleasant atmosphere. Your positive energy gives them a sense of well-being and emotional security.

Your Jupiter is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mars:

Your optimistic outlook and encouragement boost your child's confidence and determination. They feel supported to take on greater challenges and engage in stimulating activities. Your presence inspires them to give their best.

Your Jupiter is in tension with your child's Mars:

Your optimism and enthusiasm can sometimes push them beyond their abilities, which can make them stressed or anxious. Take care to assess your child's strengths and weaknesses before encouraging them to embark on activities that are too demanding. A measured approach will help avoid exhaustion or anxiety.

Your Saturn is in a tension aspect to your child's Sun:

Your rules and expectations can sometimes restrict your child's spontaneity and confidence. They feel that you are holding them back from achieving their goals, and may feel constrained or hesitant in your presence. To avoid this, encourage them to take the initiative and support them in their choices. Rejoice in their small victories and support them with kindness so that they feel comfortable and fulfilled.

Your Saturn is in a relaxed aspect to your child's Sun:

Your child feels stable and confident in your presence, which encourages him to make more considered decisions. Your rules and certainties reassure them and stabilise their ambitions. In your presence, he's more realistic and his decisions are more considered and responsible. He knows how to benefit from your experiences. In this way, you are a sure support for his success.

Your Saturn is in tension with your child's Moon:

Your child may see you as a hindrance to their organisation, because your timetable is too restrictive for them. Let them take their time to get organised and find their own rhythm. Your rigid or demanding approach may be detrimental to their comfort and peace of mind. This can lead to anxiety in your child, who may perceive you as too strict or rigid. It's important to be more flexible and let your child organise their routine at their own pace.

Your Saturn is in a relaxed aspect with your child's Moon:

Your timetable and the wisdom you've acquired over the years will help him to organise his day-to-day life and contribute to his emotional well-being. He feels reassured and organised in your presence, which helps him to find a balanced rhythm.

Thanks to you, they will learn to assume their responsibilities more effectively, manage their household chores and solve their day-to-day problems more calmly.

Your Saturn is in tension with your child's Mercury:

Your certainties, principles or high expectations prevent him from expressing himself freely and inhibit his intellectual faculties. He may feel restricted and less inclined to react spontaneously or explore. In your presence, he may not dare express his opinions.

Don't force them to think like you. Respect and value their ideas and opinions, even if they are different from your own.

Your Saturn is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mercury:

Your wisdom and consistency help your child to concentrate, structure his thoughts and stay attentive. You foster an environment conducive to communication, which makes them calmer, more focused and more thoughtful.

Your Saturn is in tension with your child's Venus:

This configuration indicates that your child may sometimes feel your expectations or rules as limiting, particularly in areas related to his emotional needs. Your structured or reserved approach may seem cold or demanding to your child, who on the other hand may aspire to more lightness, fun or spontaneity.

It's important to show your child tenderness and understanding, so that they feel accepted and loved. Respect their emotional needs and make sure you create a warm environment.

Your Saturn is in harmonious aspect with your child's Venus :

Your child sees you as a solid and reliable support, helping him to build a healthy foundation in his relationships and to understand the importance of commitment and lasting values. Your structured and wise approach gives them a sense of security and stability, while helping them to develop a realistic and balanced vision of love and life's pleasures. He feels genuinely loved and appreciates the depth of your relationship. Your presence and constancy reinforce his feelings and help him to develop a relationship of trust.

Your Saturn is in tension with your child's Mars:

Your child may feel that your advice or limits are holding him back, while you may see his behaviour as impatient or unpredictable. To overcome this tension, it's important to strike a balance between your child's need for freedom of action and your desire to establish structuring rules. Avoid judging or restricting him when he expresses his assertiveness. Don't try to control his actions.

Cultivating an open dialogue and valuing your efforts while sharing the benefits of patience and perseverance can help transform these challenges into a constructive dynamic.

Your Saturn is in harmonious aspect with your child's Mars:

Your calmness and experience help them to channel their energy constructively. In your presence, he feels more balanced and reassured, enabling him to engage in activities with confidence and stability. You give them the support they need to develop and manage their energy smoothly. With you, he'll grow slowly but surely.

Conclusion

Over the pages of this book, we have explored the richness and complexity of astrology as applied to children.

Understanding the position of the planets at the time of your child's birth gives you a better grasp of what makes him or her unique. Whether it's the playful energy of a child marked by Mars in Aries or the quiet sensitivity of a Moon in Cancer, each planetary position in a sign or house reveals particular aspects of his or her temperament and reactions to the world. By taking into account the aspects between the planets, you can also discover how certain tensions or affinities between these influences can nuance his behaviour and his interactions with his environment. By knowing these elements, you can not only anticipate your child's reactions and preferences, but also create an environment better suited to his needs and well-being.

Astrology does not claim to replace the love, patience and careful observation needed to understand our children. On the contrary, it enriches this relationship by offering us an additional prism, a framework for interpretation that strengthens our ability to listen to them, support them and love them fully. This book aims to arouse your curiosity and encourage you to observe your child in a new light, with the magic of the stars as a backdrop.

We hope that this astrological exploration has nurtured your bond with your child and strengthened your complicity.
